PERSONAL—FOR MEN
Are You A Woman Hater?

I RODE WITH CASTRO'S KILLERS

IF YOU ARE AGE 17 TO 45

WE OFFER YOU IMMEDIATE TRAINING AS A

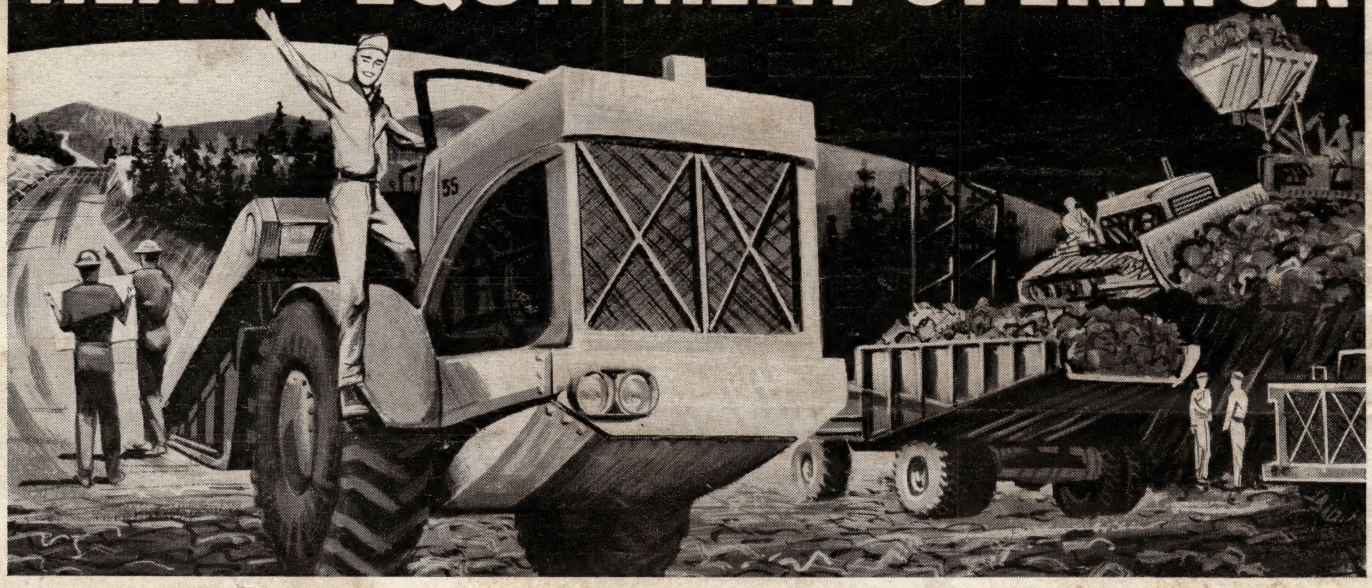
HEAVY EQUIPMENT OPERATOR



What you are looking at are the wonder tools of a new age, mechanical monsters that are changing the face of the world we live in. The BULL DOZER . . . the LOADER . . . the GRADER . . . the EARTH-MOVER —these have made possible today's complex civilization.

But as mighty as they are these giants are lifeless without the men to operate them. Only under the guidance of a man's hand can these machines throw bridges over wide rivers, create dams to turn wasteland into lush fields, ribbon the broad face of our country with super-highways. Only because there are men at the controls are schools, factories, office buildings, hospitals reaching toward the sky.

This is an industry which is spending billions of dollars —yet even as it builds it is unable to meet the demand. This is an industry which is charged with supplying facilities for the explosive increase in population—here and all over the world. This is an industry which uses TRAINED MEN! And these men must come from somewhere!

Would you like to join these men? Do you want a TRAINED MAN'S FUTURE in the HEAVY EQUIPMENT FIELD?

Then you may be able to have it. With the complete, PRACTICAL training which the Heavy Equipment Division of Northwest Schools can furnish you, you can look forward to a tremendous future in the giant field of heavy construction—working here in the U. S. or in foreign lands.

Heavy equipment experience is not necessary and you need not interrupt your present schooling or job. And read this carefully: Your training will be completed on the same machines that are used on the job—modern equipment.

DON'T DELAY. To learn about your opportunity without obligation, use the postage paid card facing this announcement. If someone has already used the card, just write a note to HEAVY EQUIPMENT TRAINING, DEPT. NH-16 , NORTHWEST SCHOOLS, 730 THIRD AVENUE, NEW YORK 17, N. Y. Give your name, address, age, nearest phone, working hours. You will get full information.

But there is one thing that is vitally necesary: You must have a sincere interest in becoming a heavy equipment operator. These announcements are interesting men all over the country and thousands are writing in. Our representatives simply do not have time to visit those who are merely curious. They ask you for no obligation or commitment except this: You must have a serious interest. Whether or not you later decide to go ahead is strictly up to you.

The man who will call on you is a specialist.

He will explain to you in detail, the advantages of preparing for a future as a Heavy Equipment operator. You can make up your mind from what you learn from him whether a heavy equipment operator's life is for you. To so many men—men like you—the Northwest representative was an enormously important visitor. He may be the same for you.

The men in these enviable careers are no different from you . . . excepting that they have taken the one step . . . to get TRAINING. The next step is yours.

Fill in the card facing this page and drop it in the mail. No stamp is needed...we pay the postage. Then the next move will be ours. Good luck to you.

That's all it takes, with the aid of this simplified five-volume home-study course, to gain all the benefits of a complete knowledge of mathematics — benefits like security, higher pay, self-confidence, and a better, more important job.

Based on new, easy-to-follow methods developed by Professor Thompson at Pratt Institute, this new course will show you how to master every type of mathematical problem quickly and easily. You start right at the beginning with a review of arithmetic (with dozens of new, time-saving short-cuts) and proceed step-by-step, lesson-by-lesson, into every practical phase of higher mathematics.

Every minute pays big dividends

The time you spend with this course will really pay off. Mathematics is the basic tool of all scientific and technical work and men who know how to use it are quickly recognized and rewarded.

You need mathematics to work with the complex technical requirements of most modern development and manufacturing processes. Without a working knowledge of algebra, trigonometry and geometry, even the most capable man can be left behind while others forge ahead to bigger, higher-paying jobs. Don't be left behind!

If purchased individually, these five volumes would cost you $2.95 each or a total of $14.75. But, if you order them now, as a set, you will receive the entire course — all five volumes — for only $2.85 down and $3.00 a month for three months — a substantial saving!

Is there a Question on your mind?

JUST ASK AN EXPERT

QUESTION: (From Roger W. Thurston, Cooperstown, N.Y.)
Dear Sir:

According to the Ask Adventure page of Adventure for December, you are an advisor on Sunken Treasure.

Being so may I submit a question or two on this subject? This has puzzled me for some years.

In the year 1714 a large fleet of Spanish Galleon sailed out of Spain. —Fifteen ships, including flag ships. They were loaded to the gills according to the story with all manner of valuable cargo in silver plate, bars, and gold and emeralds.

On nearing the shores of Florida, a hurricane of terrific force drove all the ships except the flagship (which escaped to report the story) onto the rocks of Corysfoot reef off Key Largo, Florida. That is the report anyway. All was lost in the storm.

The next year the Spaniards returned to the site of the sunken ships and salvaged about 2 million in silver coins and plate which was piled onto a small island off shore.

Discovered by an English fishing fleet, the loot was hijacked from the Spaniards by the English crew, who then returned to the Island of Jamaica from which they came. The Spanish went home empty handed.

Now this was all over two centuries ago and the remainder of the treasure has supposedly lain there off Key Largo ever since, or has it?

I was in Florida last winter and went down to the keys with some friends, and we got in a boat and did a little exploring off Pidgeon key hoping to sight up a wreck, but had no luck there. As far as I have been able to ascertain no one has every heard of anybody getting any of the sunken wealth off Key Largo.

In the age of diving lungs and good diving equipment it seems rather strange to me that no attempt to salvage these wrecks has been made or reported in recent years at least.

Have any of these wrecks ever been found or explored? And has anything of value ever been reported as being salvaged from them? Fourteen ships could carry a lot of silver.

Do you have any information on the subject?

If the silver cargo was ever there, where is it now?

In closing I might add another fact which I read of which might have some bearing on the case.

A ship (sunken) was located some years ago by two divers. It was a galleon and contained several thousand dollars worth of silver.

The divers salvaged half of it and left, returning several weeks later for the rest of the treasure.

They never located the wreck again or the rest of the silver, although they went to the exact location. It had just vanished completely.

How do you explain this one?

ANSWER: (By Dale M. Tittler, TRUE ADVENTURES consultant)

Your letter has been forwarded to me as the ASK ADVENTURE Treasure advisor.

There are several stories about the Spanish Plate Fleet which you mentioned, one of which is that the year of its sinking was 1715 and that it consisted of 14, not 15, unidentified ships. The total sum lost has been estimated at $65,000,000 and the date of the sinking is thought to be June 30th.

The circumstances of the sinking are still a mystery. If the date is correct it's unlikely that they were sunk by a hurricane as the hurricane season normally does not begin until August. They could have foundered in rough weather, at night for the Spanish galleon was poorly designed and easily capsized.

Strangely, there is another report which states that this particular fleet was wrecked off Long Key, some 35 to 40 miles below Carysfoot Reef. It's been proven that the entire length of the Keys is one vast graveyard of ships, of both recent and ancient origin. The area around Key Largo and Miami is said to contain at least 60 wrecks.

At present, I know of no large scale operations around Key Largo.

QUESTION: (From H. M. Dolber, Oceanside, California)

I am interested in obtaining as much information as possible on commercial sea fishing—type of boat, gear, and fish most easily marketable.

ANSWER: (By Lt. C. B. Lemon, U.S.C.G. (Ret.), TRUE ADVENTURES consultant)

I might start by saying that one who desires to go into commercial fishing should first decide on the general location, or in what waters he expects to conduct operations, for the reason that in various areas certain types of boats and gear are used for taking the species of fish that are found in those areas; these types of boats and gear vary quite a bit. For instance, a craft suitable for fishing in or near tropical waters wouldn't be suitable for the waters of Alaska or northern waters of the Atlantic; and the kinds of fish would be different also as well as the means of catching them.

Commercial fishing isn't just the simple matter of going off shore a ways and dropping a line overboard; it's a specialized business and requires some capital to get started, to say nothing of considerable knowhow in the way of seafaring, a certain amount of marine engineering in regard to power plants and upkeep of the vessel and its gear. In other words, one should be quite a bit of a seafaring man as well as fisherman.

In addition to the know-how, I would suggest that one who desires to go in for this sort of thing should have something like $20,000.00 to invest in anything like a suitable boat even for a two man operation, and possibly more than that, depending on the size of the boat, and I would suggest nothing under 40 feet, and with diesel power.

In case you could narrow your field to a certain area, say the waters off southern Calif. or of the waters of New England, I could be quite a bit more specific.

QUESTION: (From Carl South, Grand Junction, Colorado)

As a motorcycle enthusiast and a member of a small motorcycle club, I would like to know where I can obtain movies and race results pertaining to motorcycling.

ANSWER: (By Freddie Ludlow, TRUE ADVENTURE consultant)

To get the loan of movies of motorcycle events, you could contact your local motorcycle dealer or the motorcycle distributor in your area, such as the Triumph Distributor, Johnson Motors, Inc. at 267 W. Colorado St. in Pasadena 1, Calif., or B.S.A. Distributor, Hap Alzina at 3074 Broadway, Oakland Calif., or Harley-Davidson Motor Co. at Milwaukee 1, Wis.

For race results and other motorcycle information, you could subscribe for Motorcyclist Magazine at 1035 E. Green St., Pasadena 1, Calif. which has a very good monthly coverage of all motorcycle activities. Or join the World Wide Cycle Club for $5.00 a year which send out a monthly bulletin of races and newspapers from towns where large events are held, such as Daytona, Laconia, Peoria and even the 500 Auto Race at Indianapolis.

A VIGNETTE OF DANGER

I RODE WITH CASTRO'S KILLERS

■ They called him el Meutre—The Butcher. His real name was Colonel Armande Calvè and he was one of Fidel's special pets. He was also, if I may say it, the foulest, most degenerate pig it has ever been my misfortune to meet.

Me?

It would be better that you do not know. I still have a mother in Oriente Province. Suffice it to say that when Fidel came into the mountains, promising us liberation from the dictator in Havana, we flocked like geese to his banner.

We were ragged and ill-equipped and we didn't eat too regularly, but we told ourselves we were on a holy mission and we fought like devils—obsolete rifles against machine guns, six condemned two-motored Douglas planes against the jet dive bombers your State Department sent.

And we won. We died and we starved and we rotted in the dungeons, those of us who were caught. But we won.

And then, at the supreme moment of victory, for those of us who were still alive, it became a bitter victory indeed.

I didn't realize how bad it was until The Butcher came.

He was a big black-browed stallion, The Butcher, and some women may have considered him handsome. I found him paunchy and ill put together but that is a matter of personal taste.

At first we went out on legitimate policing raids. There were still some Batista followers in the hills, and it was our job to exterminate them. We asked and gave no quarter. When we couldn't find the men—well, they had families and we had our own ways of getting what information we had to. It wasn't pretty but it was war.

Our colonel was good at that sort of thing, all right. He had ways of persuading men that produced results, and if they didn't live after the questioning was over, what did it matter? They were going to die anyway, and it saved the firing squad the bother.

Just about then The Butcher decided that the women made more interesting prey. I guess I don't have to tell you the details. As I said, he was both corrupt and a pig.

The trouble was, he had a rakehell crew with him who liked this juicy little aftermath of war. Me, I have always been able to satisfy my emotional needs by consent rather than by force. It's all a matter of taste, I gues. So I tried to close my eyes to what was going on.

That is, until the day we rode into Limu.

You never heard of Limu. It's a beautiful little town hidden deep in the mountains. Most of the men were away fighting for Castro. The firing-squad had taken care of the rest. I told The Butcher this and he just laughed. "Nevertheless," he said, "we will raid there tomorrow." He winked at one of his lieutenants. "I understand that hunting in Limu is good," he said. "We will see what we will see."

The next day I understood. Little Pepe Ramoz had told me about it even before we got into town. It was the daughter of the mayor. Once, long ago, The Butcher had made advances to her she had repudiated him publicly and with scorn.

The Butcher was not one to forget that sort of thing.

We rode into town, thirty hard-bitten devils, and we didn't waste any time.

"Get the women out," The Butcher barked. "I want to take them for questioning."

The girl—she was beautiful as a picture. Even under the terror you could see the grace, the niceness of her. But she didn't look very graceful now. She was writhing, twisting in The Butcher's hands and there was blood on her cheek where the pig had hit her and she was sweaty and dirty from the hard, hopeless fight she had put up.

This is not a war story, my friends. I was a soldier. I had fought as hard as the next man. But now I was tired of the killing and the rapine and the senseless cruelty to my own people. And I had a few bullets left in my carbine.

Would you believe it—someone shot The Butcher right between his fat eyes!

A hidden enemy, doubtless. It was a shot I would have been proud of, and I am regarded as a better than average marksman, if I must be the one to say so.

We rode out of there and I kept on going. I didn't know whether anyone had seen me or not. And now, senor, I am in New York, a little inoffensive man, as you see . . .

My pockets are all too empty these days, but I do have a couple of news clippings there. One of them concerns a wedding in Limu. It seems the mayor's daughter got over her fright and washed the dirt from her face and finally married that man from the next town. That he happens to be my cousin is only incidental. The other clipping, even smaller, says nothing of any importance. The heading, small and trifling, says Castro Aide Slain in Raid.

It only needs one more thing to make the picture complete.

I'm having the clippings framed. When they are ready, I'm going to put them in my study, beside a battered old rifle. I hope they may serve as a modest reminder of my humble part in beginning a new day of freedom for Cuba. ■

"It's easy," says Don Bolander...

"and you don't have to go back to school!"

How to Speak and Write Like a College Graduate

"Do you avoid the use of certain words even though you know perfectly well what they mean? Have you ever been embarrassed in front of friends or the people you work with, because you pronounced a word incorrectly? Are you sometimes unsure of yourself in a conversation with new acquaintances? Do you have difficulty writing a good letter or putting your true thoughts down on paper?

"If so, then you're a victim of crippled English," says Don Bolander, Director of Career Institute. "Crippled English is a handicap suffered by countless numbers of intelligent, adult men and women. Quite often they are held back in their jobs and their social lives because of their English. And yet, for one reason or another, it is impossible for these people to go back to school."

Is there any way, without going back to school, to overcome this handicap? Don Bolander says, "Yes!" With degrees from the University of Chicago and Northwestern University, Bolander is an authority on adult education. During the past eight years he has helped thousands of men and women stop making mistakes in English, increase their vocabularies, improve their writing, and become interesting conversationalists right in their own homes.

BOLANDER TELLS HOW IT CAN BE DONE

During a recent interview, Bolander said, "You don't have to go back to school in order to speak and write like a college graduate. You can gain the ability quickly and easily in the privacy of your own home through the Career Institute Method." In his answers to the following questions, Bolander tells how it can be done.

Question What is so important about a person's ability to speak and write?

Answer People judge you by the way you speak and write. Poor English weakens your self-confidence — handicaps you in your dealings with other people. Good English is absolutely necessary for getting ahead in business and social life. You can't express your ideas fully or reveal your true personality without a sure command of good English.

Question What do you mean by a "command of English"?

Answer A command of English means you can express yourself clearly and easily without fear of embarrassment or making mistakes. It means you can write well, carry on a good conversation — also read rapidly and remember what you read. Good English can help you throw off self-doubts that may be holding you back.

Question But isn't it necessary for a person to go to school in order to gain a command of good English?

Answer No, not any more. You can gain the ability to speak and write like a college graduate right in your own home — in only a few minutes each day.

Question Is this something new?

Answer Career Institute of Chicago has been helping people for many years. The Career Institute Method quickly shows you how to stop making embarrassing mistakes, enlarge your vocabulary, develop your writing ability, discover the "secrets" of interesting conversation.

Question Does it really work?

Answer Yes, beyond question. In my files there are thousands of letters, case histories and testimonials from people who have used the Career Institute Method to achieve amazing success in their business and personal lives.

Question Who are some of these people?

Answer Almost anyone you can think of. The Career Institute Method is used by men and women of all ages. Some have attended college, others high school, and others only grade school. The method is used by business men and women, typists and secretaries, teachers, industrial workers, clerks, ministers and public speakers, housewives, sales people, accountants, foremen, writers, foreign-born citizens, government and military personnel, retired people, and many others.

Question How long does it take for a person to gain the ability to speak and write like a college graduate, using the Career Institute Method?

Answer In some cases people take only a few weeks to gain a command of good English. Others take longer. It is up to you to set your own pace. In as little time as 15 minutes a day, you will see quick results.

Question How may a person find out more about the Career Institute Method?

Answer I will gladly mail a free 32-page booklet to anyone who is interested.

How to 'take charge' of a highly-paid job in AIR CONDITIONING & REFRIGERATION

Are you interested in a better job, big money and a secure future? Do you prefer work that is interesting, a challenge to your imagination, and loaded with opportunities to go in business for yourself? Then why not consider a career as mechanic or technician in the Air Conditioning and Refrigeration industry!

You see, Air Conditioning is now America's finest opportunity field. The government reports that during the past 12 years, production increased 400%. No other industry did better! The fact is, 8,200,000 domestic and industrial units are produced annually. Already 150,000,000 are in use. Experts say that 20,000 technicians must be trained each year to match industry growth! You can qualify for a top-pay job. How? Train at home in spare time. The CTI method is easy, practical and resultful. Quick, too. For full information, mail coupon below.

Many CTI graduates go in business

It is relatively easy to start a repair business in the Air Conditioning and Refrigeration field. Armed with up-to-date knowledge, seasoned with skill acquired through practice on kits, and equipped with tools and gauges, many graduates start out on their own. Some expand into retail stores. Others have contracts to service taverns, restaurants, food stores and commercial buildings. The more resourceful become contractors. Conditions for success are excellent.

Many students earn cash as they train

The average CTI student is eager to put his skill to profitable work, on a part-time basis. Though most students prefer to tie up with local dealers and repair establishments, a surprising number are independents. The extra cash helps meet training cost. Often there's enough to bank, or invest in more equipment.

Letters prove efficiency of training

"I have a business of my own servicing domestic and commercial refrigerators."—Paul Humphrey, Colo. "I made $1,000 while training, and am now a refrigeration man for a dairy."—Giles Minton, N. C. "I opened a little shop and am swamped with work."—Charles Corley, Kan. "Doing service work on a part-time basis the past 10 months, I earned $2,400. Have a nice business."—Renos Johnson, Ind. "My firm advanced me to field superintendent."—Milburn Dougan, Ark. You can do as well as these graduates!

An exclusive feature of CTI training is that you get parts to build a ¼ h.p. commercial-type condensing unit (above). You also receive mechanic's tools and gauges (right). After unit is assembled, you can build an air conditioner, freezer, refrigerator or milk cooler. Only CTI sends working kits.

Learn by practicing—Get valuable experience

The modern way to train is to gain skill and experience with knowledge—not after you graduate. From CTI's simple picture-lessons, you master elemental theory. From experiments and building with kits, you develop skill. In other words, you learn by practicing, pick up solid experience much like on the job. That's the interesting, relaxing way to train after a day's work on your present job. CTI training is exciting!

Send for fact-filled booklets—Mail coupon now

Exactly what are your opportunities in Air Conditioning and Refrigeration? How does CTI train men for success? Get detailed, accurate answers to these and many more questions by filling out and mailing the coupon below. No obligation. —Commercial Trades Institute, Chicago 26, Ill.

A GREAT REPORTER DIES

BY DICK ADLER

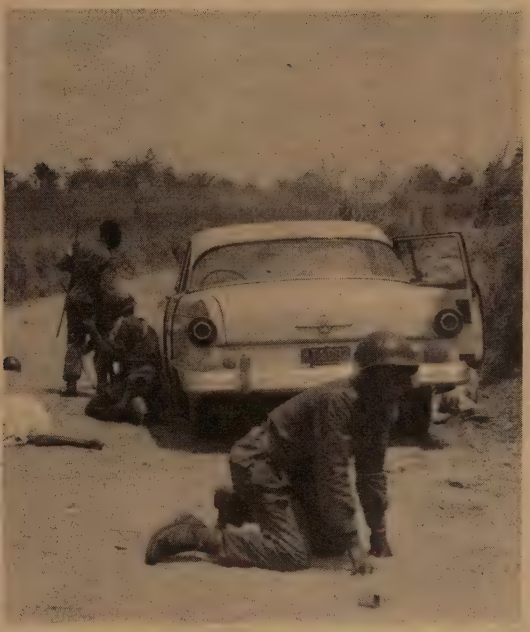
Henry Taylor, perhaps America's greatest modern foreign correspondent, has just written his last story in his own blood. Here, dramatic and tragic, is the record of his last assignment

A GREAT REPORTER DIES

The Balubas, infuriated, refuse to lay down smuggled arms.

Lumumba's beleaguered troops, exposed to sniping, go into retaliative action in the midst of murderous crossfire.

Maddened, Lumumba soldier senselessly bayonets corpse again and again, ignoring obvious danger.



Lumumba soldier, fatally wounded falls ahead of enemy he has killed.

■ He had gone everywhere danger was, so long as there was the least chance of coming up with a story. He'd scrambled ashore with U.S. Marines in Lebanon, crawled through the jungles of Cuba's Oriente Province to get an exclusive interview with rebel leader Fidel Castro, donned skindiving gear and helped to search for the bodies of U.S. Navy bandsmen killed in a plane crash off Rio de Janeiro during President Eisenhower's South American tour, and was knocked down by the crowds who'd mobbed Jim Haggerty in Tokyo.

Those who knew him and worked with him called him another Ernie Pyle. Among foreign correspondents, he ranked with the best.

So when Scripps-Howard newsman Henry N. Taylor cabled his Washington office from Rome that he was heading for his next assignment in the rebellion-torn Congo, it seemed like just another routine job for the 31-year-old ace news hawk who'd covered so much violence in his short life.

Four days after his arrival in Leopoldville, Taylor slugged a dispatch with this message: "This is for use Tuesday, in case I am unable to file Monday from the Bakwanga hot spot." The (Continued on page 63)

■ EVERY once in awhile a man comes along whose hatred of the fair sex is so obvious that the whole world is aware of it. Sometimes such a man reveals his loathing for females by acts of physical aggression committed against them ranging from simple beatings up to and including murder.

These violent women haters or "misogynists" are obviously mentally ill, even when they are legally sane inasmuch as they are able to distinguish between right and wrong when committing their aggressions.

Fortunately, such extreme woman haters are few and far between. That is why their cases stand out in the annals of criminology, psychiatry, and sociology. By contrast, there are many misogynists of lesser degree, including multitudes who do not know they are bitter toward females and who may believe they are fond of the sex in a patronizing way. For instance, one of the greatest of all male poets summed up this attitude toward a wife with the observation that she deserved a place in a man's affection between his dog and his horse—"a little less than the former, a little more than the latter." Another held that Man was made to serve God while Woman (Continued on page 72)

GIRLS OF THE LONDON NIGHT

■ In 1959 the British Government congratulated itself on the result of its new Street Offences Act which was designed to clear the streets of prostitutes and vice.

Within a year London's Metropolitan Police Commissioner Sir Joseph Simpson reported that London had had its highest crime rate ever in the previous twelve months.

For the Act had founded a whole new underworld of vice: strip clubs with names like Peeperama and Spotlight; beer club gambling joints with brothels upstairs; a "Ladies Directory" booklet listing prostitutes' names and what they have to offer; prostitutes soliciting from open windows; from cars, on underground trains, by telephone kiosks; brothels disguised as language schools.

These are the results of Britain's big anti-vice Act, put into firm effect precisely at midnight Sunday, August 16, 1959.

City's new Street Offences Act pushed streetwalkers downstairs into the subway system.

GIRLS OF THE LONDON NIGHT

The day's newspapers had dramatized this moment with glaring headlines asking "Is this it?" And "What Will Happen?"

The last chime of Big Ben was ending an evil era. Well-known London areas Hyde Park, Mayfair and Soho were still crowded with tourists and merry-makers but something was missing. The streets were not the same. Just before the stroke of twelve, prostitutes had checked their gold watches. They had stopped their idle chatter, price-fixing and soliciting on the street corners, and scampered away.

One of them, "Blonde Nellie," a forty-year old collection of two hundred police convictions, stayed in her doorway on Curzon Street, Mayfair, until four A.M.—two hours later than usual—in an effort to bring her day's takings up to normal. She was disappointed, needed the money, but wouldn't dare go out on the street.

Places where once dozens of girls propositioned the same men as they walked past their line-up were now bare. Hyde Park was business territory for between eight hundred and one thousand girls on Friday nights! Mayfair operated discreetly and expensively with nine hundred and Soho mass-produced erotica with the help of five thousand, many of whom had their headquarters in Soho but paced the streets in far-flung suburbs.

Next day government officials, among them Sir John Wolfenden, were elated. Police were astounded.

By Monday morning only two prostitutes had been arrested.

The usual crowd for the Old Bailey was forty to fifty every weekend, each to be fined the normal two pounds.

The Streets Offences Act had hit Britain, specially London, the place foreign visitors were calling "City of Sin," and seemingly cleared the streets of the scourge of prostitution.

The Act was born in 1954. It had been fathered by Sir John Wolfenden, mothered by the indignant British Government and raised by a committee of social works, teachers, and ministers.

Sir John had been officially appointed to prepare a report on present conditions in Britain which would result in an Act of Parliament designed to clear the streets of vice. By 1957 the Wolfenden Committee had prepared their report. It was considered first class.

When the Act became law its success was measured in terms of how many girls were still operating on street corners and openly bothering the public. In this respect the Act has been extremely successful. Convictions are down from hundreds to dozens.

But recently a report from the Inspectors of Constabulary warns that Britain is in the throes of a rapidly increasing crime wave. They say: "Something must be done before it gets completely out of hand."

At the same time Sir Joseph (Continued on page 67)

She ruled half the world and she saved an empire. But Russia's amazing, indestructible Catherine is remembered mainly for the fact that although she had scores of "favorites," she still remained

THE QUEEN WHO WAS STARVED FOR LOVE

BY LESLIE STANTON

ILLUSTRATED BY BRUCE MINNEY

■ THE twenty-fourth and last official favorite of the insatiably licentious Empress of Russia, Catherine The Great, smugly preened his hard, muscular body before a full-length mirror in an ornately furnished room of the Imperial Palace in St. Petersburg. For tall, handsome, gracefully built twenty-two year old Lieutenant Platon Zuboff felt supremely confident that he would easily pass the first of the three "tests" that would gain him admission to the bedchamber of the aging, but still lustful Empress. And with this entrance, influence, power and wealth that would last him as long as he lived. If he lived.

Young Zuboff had been ordered to present himself to Dr. Rogerson, the court's Scottish physician for an examination. For Catherine was deadly in fear of disease. This was the first step in a technique of initiation worked out by the German thoroughness of this masterly woman ruler in acquiring each new masculine toy. Successful, the young lieutenant knew his next stop was the bedroom of Princess Protas-sov. Passing this delightful ordeal, he would then be taken over by the chief Lady-In-Waiting. If her report on his powers of virility were satisfactory—and young Zuboff was sure of that—he would be installed in apartments immediately under those of the Empress and connected with a private staircase to carry out the "duties" of Adjutant-General, the title bestowed on the plaything of this debauched monarch in her erotic reign of forty years.

Catherine's philosophy—"My heart cannot be content for even an hour without love."

THE QUEEN WHO WAS STARVED FOR LOVE

Thankfully the young lieutenant realized Catherine was in 1789 somewhat past sixty. While she could still make demands on his resources, time had slowed the excessive drive that drained his predecessors, shortened their tenure in office, and also their lives.

Young Zuboff knew that Catherine was credited by many courtiers with using up three hundred lovers before his candidacy. Conscientious historians, however, dispute this number, placing her total of amoral partners nearer fifty-five. Twenty-four of these reached the status of Adjutant-General, the official designation of the Empress' male courtesan. The balance, casual paramours, she took and quickly discarded when some more alluring youth caught her roving eye.

The official lover became a prisoner of her lust—he was at her constant beck and call; forced to follow her around night and day like a faithful dog. His compensation for this abject humiliation was enormous. During his term of office his yearly salary was a hundred thousand rubles, at today's exchange rate, $150,000. In addition he was showered with gifts of jewelry, land, palaces and serfs. But it was the continual access to the Empress that was the most valuable asset. Using his influence with his ruler, he could gain many privileges for others—at a good price to himself.

The Russian people were conditioned to the low morals of their monarchs in those days. Catherine's two female predecessors, the Empresses Anne and Elizabeth, had lived for sensual pleasure alone. Anne had been the virtual sex slave of Biron, a boorish, ugly-looking Courlander. Elizabeth reigned in erotic bondage, first to Razumowsky, a Ukranian shepherd boy, then to Ivan Schuvaloff. No one was scandalized at the depravity, crimes and murders of Catherine—debauched, but still brilliant ruler.

The prosperous reign of The Great One intensified this backward nation's already traditional servility. Anything and everything immoral or perverse was permitted. There were no more thought of censure than the pagans showed toward the sins and obscenities of their gods and Caesars. Catherine was fully aware, even proud, of her scandalous behavior and seemed to take delight in flaunting her lascivious mode of life.

Nearing the end of her reign, when she had established a rigid censorship over the printed word, an issue of the French Moniteur blasted her depravity, characterizing her as the "Messalina of the North." In majestic insolence Catherine retorted: "What I do concerns no one but myself." Then in defiant contempt she authorized the journal's distribution throughout Russia.

Catherine II, despite her dissoluteness, her murders and her crimes, was one of the most successful rulers of all time. Yet she was a ursurper, a foreigner occupying a throne on which she had no rightful claim. Not only had she overthrown her husband and then deposed her son of the crown to which he was the legal successor, but she ruled the Kremlin at a time when the legitimate monarch, Czar Ivan VI, was kept a prisoner and finally slain under her iron hand.

This Empress of all the Russias combined the political wisdom of a Caesar with the lewdness of a Messalina, yet had seemed destined for provincial obscurity when she was born as Princess Sophia Augusta Frederica in the tiny German principality of Anhalt-Zerbst, on April 27, 1729. Catherine's father and mother not only differed greatly in ages—he was forty-two at his marriage, she only fifteen—but in every other possible way. In her Memoirs Catherine described the contrast between them: "My father was very thrifty, while my mother was very extravagant. My mother was extremely fond of excitement and social life; my father liked solitude. She was gay and playful; he was serious and austere."

When Catherine was fifteen she was invited with her mother to the imperial Court of St. Petersburg by Empress Elizabeth, wanton daughter of Peter The Great. Elizabeth, in a palace revolution in 1741, had overthrown Princess Anne who had been ruling in the name of her year old son, Ivan VI. Just previous to this invitation Elizabeth had summoned her nephew, Peter, from Prussia; had him converted to the Greek Orthodox religion and named him Grand Duke, heir to her throne.

At sixteen Catherine was married to the Grand Duke, characterized by Alexander Herzen, revolutionary writer of the 19th Century, as "the most ridiculous simpleton of his time." The sole purpose of this mismatched mating was to produce an heir to the throne. Had Catherine been wedded to a loving husband, history might not have recorded her life as ranking with other infamous wantons in sensuality, murder and crime. Like all normal women she wanted to love and be loved in return. "I could not live even for an hour without love," she stated in her Memoirs. But from her ugly, pock-marked, always drunken, mentally-retarded spouse she received nothing but unfaithfulness, humiliation, neglect and scorn.

Catherine's husband, the Grand Duke Peter, was completely destitute of common sense and that necessary savoir faire demanded of royalty. Absolutely devoid of any dignity, he conducted himself like a half-witted child. His favorite pastimes were playing with his collection of toy soldiers and his hunting dogs. Then to make his marriage even worse, this (Continued on page 59)

This tasty bit of imported smörgasbord has not been wasting her time during her brief sojourn to these shores. What may well be the start of authentic stardom was launched by a series of TV appearances entitled "Fireside Theatre." Critics were more than generous with their tributes.

Following this, Greta did the lead for "Body Beautiful," a film which will be released very shortly. Her next important step up the movie ladder is to test for the Ben Hecht-Bert Lancaster production, "Sweet Smell of Success." She just finished the feminine lead in the Republic production, "The Desperate Hours." And—if all these weren't enough—she's starting a new TV series entitled "How To Marry a Millionaire."

The pretty young victim had no enemies.

He denied the murders. But police and FBI agents proved their case. The Killer with Three Faces was in custody.

■ THE VOICE on the telephone was feminine and it was trembling with excitement. The officer on duty at Omaha police headquarters said, "Take it easy, lady. Speak slowly and give me that name and address again."

The woman's voice quieted down. She said, "it's my neighbor, Mrs. Kapperman. Her husband says she been hurt badly. He asked me to phone the police."

"Maybe it's a doctor you need instead of police," the officer said patiently. If she's hurt she needs a doctor. You called the doctor yet?"

The woman said, "No. Mr. Kapperman—he's here in my apartment which is across the hall from his—he says he wants the police. He says please hurry and come right over. He says it's a police matter."

A few minutes later a squad car of police arrived at the small apartment on North Thirty-first Street, in the quiet Omaha, Nebraska, neighborhood. It was a warm day—May 28, 1957—and the doors were open and the windows, and the policemen could hear excited voices inside the building as they piled out of the squad car.

A small group filled the first floor hallway, gathered around a tall, white-faced blond young man who leaned against the wall beside an open door leading to a ground-floor apartment. "I'm Keith Kapperman. Something has happened to my wife, Rita . . ." His voice was husky. He motioned toward the open door.

Keith Kapperman followed the policeman into the apartment. "I kept everyone out—the neighbors, I mean. I'm afraid she's dead." The policeman looked hard at the young husband's face. His horror and grief seemed genuine.

Kneeling beside the body of the woman on the floor beside the neatly made bed, the officer made a swift examination. There was no pulse in the limp white hand. He lifted the sheet which had been thrown over the sprawled body. The dead woman wore a blouse only; the rest of her body was naked.

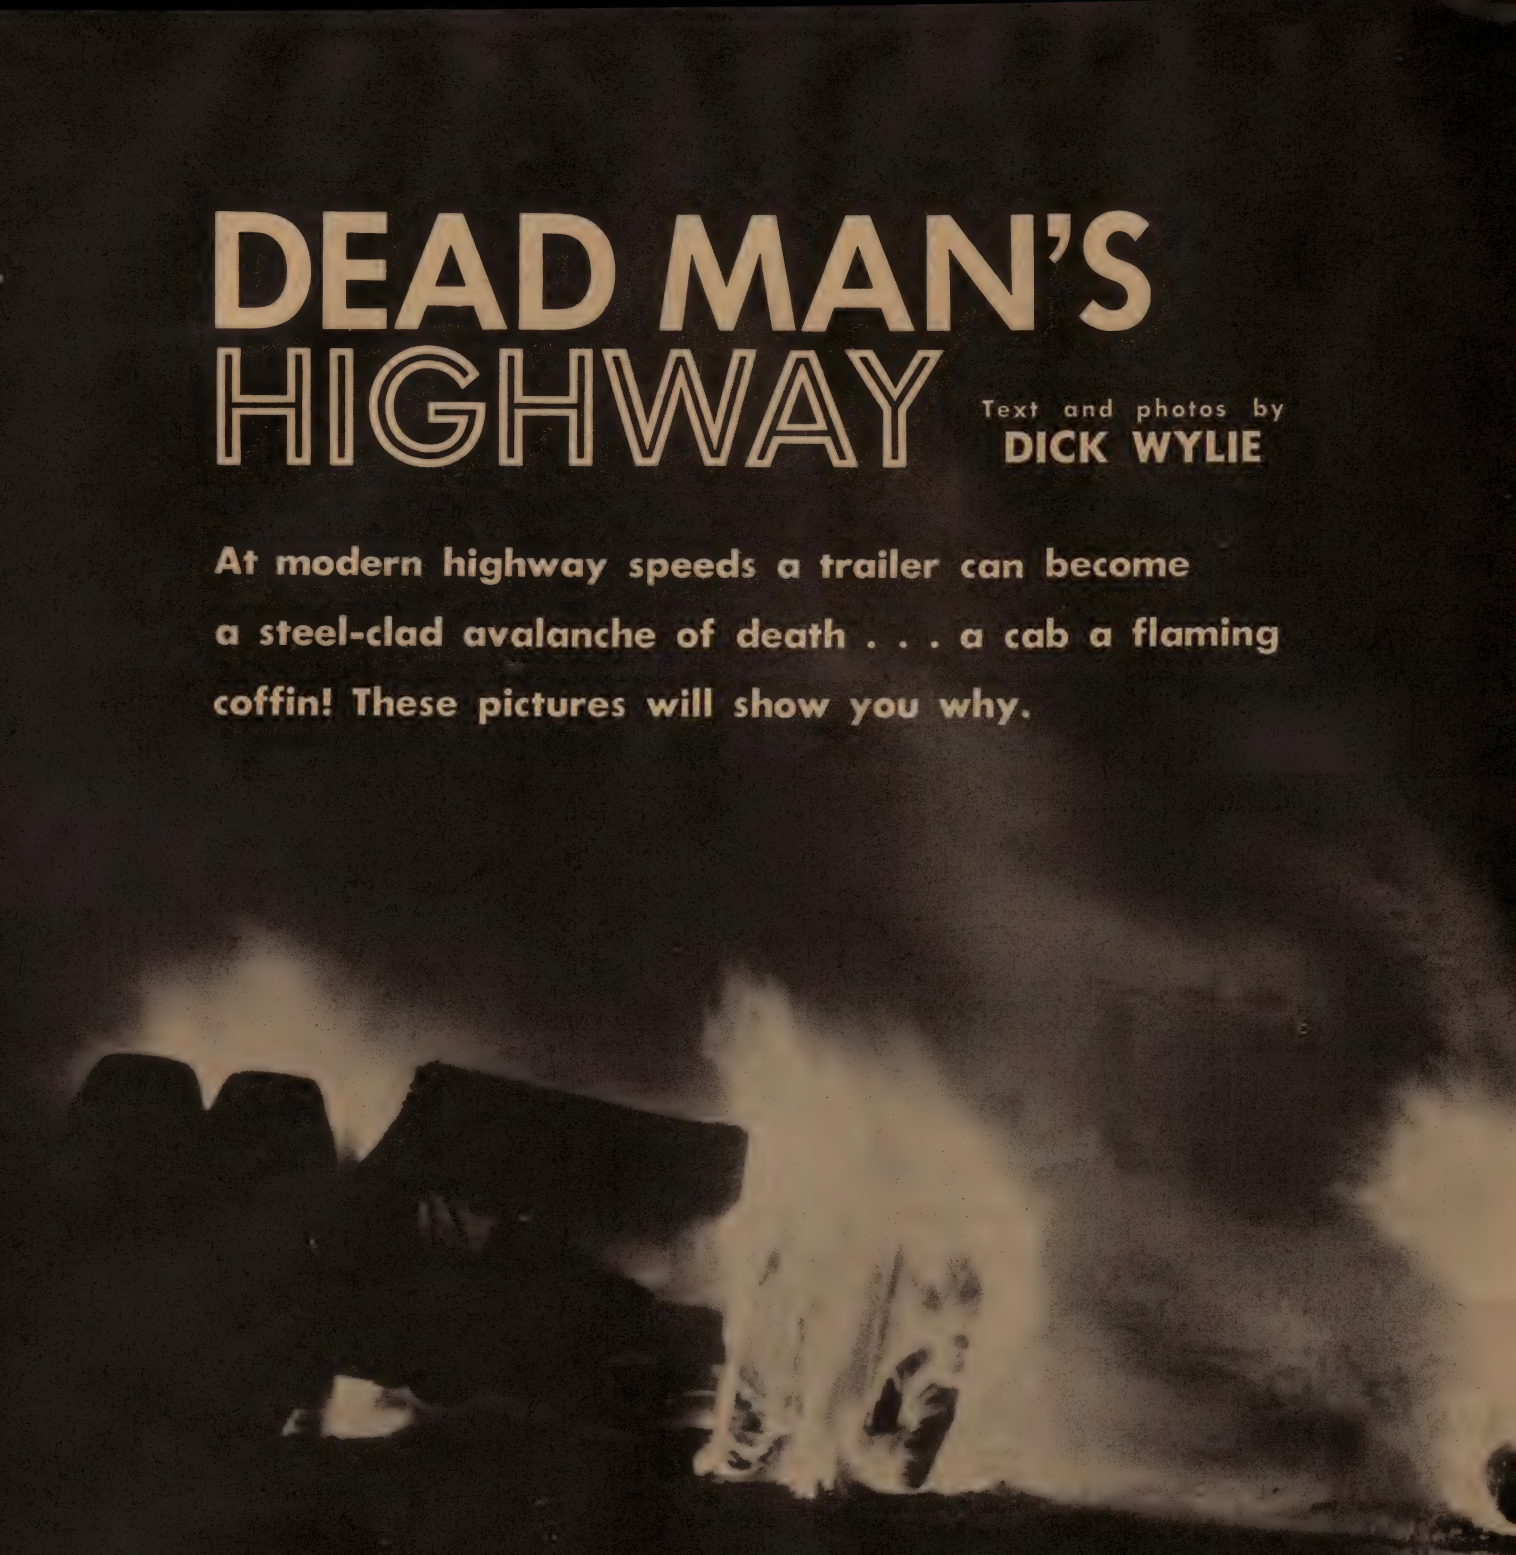
The officer stood up, glanced around the room with trained eyes. He saw the blue jeans, turned inside out and flung over a chair, the ballet type slippers lying in the middle of the room. A quick, roving look around the bedroom showed him an otherwise clean and orderly room.

The officer glanced at Keith Kapperman, who was leaning against the doorway leading to the living room, his face buried in his hands. (Continued on page 46)

DEAD MAN'S HIGHWAY

Text and photos by
DICK WYLIE

At modern highway speeds a trailer can become a steel-clad avalanche of death . . . a cab a flaming coffin! These pictures will show you why.

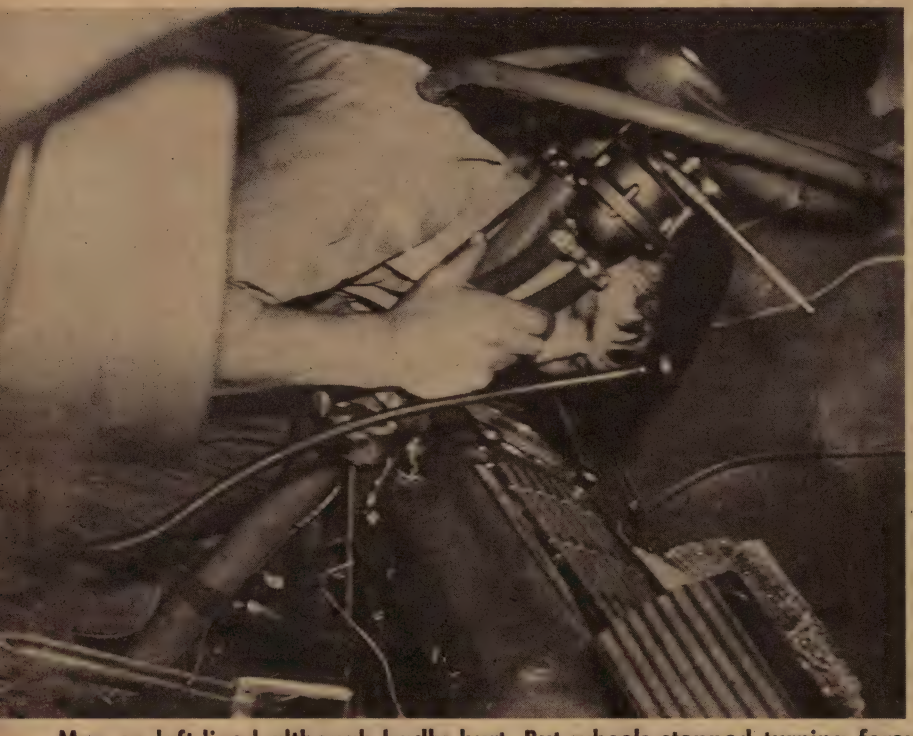


■ Ribbons of concrete stretch out of Gary, Indiana, like spokes on a huge wheel. Over these roads flow millions of truckloads of commerce, leaving the vast steel producing Chicago-Calumet area. Bringing the items of luxury and necessity to the American homes is the solemn duty of the truck driver—who are, by the way, the safest drivers on our roads today.

I'm a newsman. I travel the roads too. I see truck drivers in many phases of their lives. But, worst of all, I see them far too many times in death—victims mostly of a careless motorist. (Continued on page 36)

Still alive in this picture, driver murmured a few words then died before rescuers could loose him from his cab.

Luckless driver is dead and wrecker proceeds with task of freeing lifeless body.



Man on left lived although badly hurt. But wheels stopped turning forever for other whose cab became his shroud.

As I raise my camera to photograph the lifeless remains of a truck driver who gave his life to save the occupants of a carelessly driven car, I can't help but wonder to myself, "will his family ever realize what a hero he really was?" And even if they do realize that he died a hero, will that help a devoted wife in her hours of grief?

Troopers of the Indiana State Police Post at Chesterton radioed for a boat early one morning, soon after they arrived at the scene of a crash on US 20 at the Burns Ditch Bridge. I went to the scene, and arrived in time to see them pull the lifeless body of a truck driver from the partially submerged cab of his truck. The outfit had crashed over the bridge in an attempt to miss a car which had swerved in front of him.

Flames reddened the night sky for miles as I pushed on my gas pedal and sped to the scene of a gasoline tank truck crash on US 20, about six miles east of Gary. The truck had hit the bridge abutment, the undercarriage tore loose, the tank skidded down the highway with a loud explosion.

Did that driver swerve to miss a car also? Or did he just fall asleep? Those questions will never be answered. There were no witnesses. And, when (Continued on page 48)

The submarine S-4 had gone down with all hands lost on December 17, 1927, following a collision with the cutter Paulding. Of course, there was nothing we could do to save the crew. KILLER WITH THREE FACES

"I'm afraid there's no doubt about it," he said quietly. "She's dead. The blood on her face might be from a beating or from a shot. I'll call the coroner to send somebody to examine her."

A matter of minutes later a brief on-the-spot examination of Rita Kapperman's body was made by Acting Coroner George Sullivan.

"There's a bullet hole below her left eye," he said finally. "That's what killed her." He gently replaced the sheet over the small body. "We'll make a more extensive examination at the morgue, and determine then if she was raped."

Keith Kapperman's grief-stricken voice spoke from the doorway. "She was pregnant. In a few months we would have had our first baby. She was just 21."

By the time they returned to the Kapperman's neat little apartment the police photographers had finished their job and the coroner's men had removed the body. With the police captain at his side, Keith Kapperman began a search of the apartment to see what was missing.

"There was my week's pay check," he said as he picked up his wife's handbag from the dressing table in the bedroom. "I go to college but I work part-time as a mutuel ticket seller at Ak-Sar-Ben race track. I gave Rita my check last night and she was going to deposit it this afternoon."

The check was not in the purse. There was no wallet and no change purse there either. "She would have put the check in her wallet," Kapperman said dully. "She had the week's food money in the wallet. And she had a little change purse, too."

They made a search of the apartment but neither the wallet nor the change purse was turned up. Nothing else seemed to be missing. Nothing else was disturbed.

"Did you keep a gun in the house?" the officer asked.

Keith Kapperman shook his head. "I never owned a gun in my life."

A check with the dental college records revealed that Keith Kapperman came from a farm home near Montrose, South Dakota. His wife was from Amherst, Nebraska. She was a trained nurse at University Hospital. Kapperman had one more year at the college before he would be a qualified dentist. He and Rita had been married just four months. According to those who knew them well at the college, they were very happy and had no known enemies.

Later in the day the coroner's autopsy report came through. Inspector Ernest Brown had been put in charge of the case by now, and he was the first to see the report. Rita Kapperman had been shot to death by a bullet fired from a .30 caliber Luger.

She had been beaten and there were bruises and fingernail scratches on her throat. But there had not been an attempt made to molest her sexually.

"There's one more item in the report," Inspector Brown said. He held up an object. "This was found clutched in her right hand."

The object he displayed was an ordinary white button. But attached to it was a piece of cloth. The button was firmly sewed to the cloth, which was brown and contained a red stripe.

"Looks like a button that was torn from a cotton sports shirt," the officer commented. The inspector nodded. "Find the rest of the shirt and we'll sew up this case."

"If the killer learns we're looking for a shirt to fit this torn bit of cloth and button he'll destroy the shirt," the inspector said.

Captain Janing nodded.

"Right," he said. "I suggest we hold this back from the reporters for a few days, while we make a quiet search for the shirt."

A crew of men was put quietly to work checking laundries and cleaners for the shirt. Meanwhile, every known sex offender in the vicinity was brought to headquarters for questioning and checked out one by one as they produced alibis for the time of the killing of Rita Kapperman.

Omaha police began to believe they had another crime to add to the list of offenses that had been piled up over a year by a mysterious masked burglar who had broken into several Omaha homes and apartments and attacked several women in the process. These women had described the attacker as wearing a cloth bag with eye holes cut in it over his head, and tennis shoes and gloves.

So far the masked house breaker had not, as far as police knew, committed murder. But if he was the intruder who had robbed and killed Rita Kapperman, then his pattern was changing.

As the story hit the newsstands in Omaha, every woman in the city began to consider this possibility and the panic was on. Women refused to open their doors to anyone; locksmiths were swamped with orders for window locks, iron bars, and other burglar precautions.

Then, the police got a break. The sharp eye of a member of the force observed that a 1955 blue and white Buick had been towed in by a traffic detail because the car had been parked at Fortieth and Saratoga streets since the past week.

The blue and white Buick immediately got every known test and was thoroughly searched. The car was empty of any clothing or other personal items, and no fingerprints were found—it looked as if somebody had carefully polished the car thoroughly after parking it.

There was only the license plate as any sort of identification and it was soon established that the car was registered in the name of John David Phillips, at an address on South Omaha.

A check was made immediately at that address and police were told that Phillips had lived in the rooming house, but had left months ago without leaving a forwarding address.

Sergeants John Zaloudek and Darwin Boyd who checked the packing house at which Phillips had worked for two years, as a pig killer.

"But he hasn't checked in since last Tuesday," the foreman of the plant told them. "And we haven't heard from him. We've got his paycheck for $84.51 here and he hasn't even sent for that. I hate to lose him. Phillips is a good worker."

The two officers talked to everyone who knew Phillips in the house where he had lived. He was known as a quiet man who kept his room neat and his car clean; who paid his debts promptly and never missed a payment on his car. One of the men in the house suddenly recalled that Phillips had once mentioned being arrested out of town by the Safety Patrol for speeding. "Said they took his gun away from him, but returned it later."

"He tell you what kind of gun it was?" the sergeant asked quickly.

The man said, "Yeah. He told me about the arrest because we were talking about guns. It was a Luger."

Police made a thorough check of Phillips room on Emmet Street, found his clothes in the closet and the bureau drawers neat and in good order; everything left as if the man expected to return any minute and had had no thought of disappearing when he last left the room. They did not find a brown shirt with red line which had one white button torn off.

The landlady met them in the hall. "You want to look out in the garage, inspector? Mr. Phillips kept his car out there."

"Might as well," the officer said, thanking her. He then instructed all of the men to return to headquarters excepting the two who had accompanied him. "We'll look over the garage and follow you," he added.

Alongside the garage door there stood a garbage can. The landlady, who had followed them out, said testily, "A nice thing it is, not having the garbage picked up in almost a week. Men on a strike, they tell me when I called up."

Automatically, the inspector lifted the lid from the garbage can. "We'll replace the stuff," he told the woman, "But I'll have to dump it and search the can."

A collection of garbage was poured out onto the ground. In the mess, near the bottom of the can, they saw the shirt—a brown cotton shirt with red stripes. When the officer pulled it out of the mess and held it up the torn hole where a button was missing was clearly visible.

The search for John David Phillips became all out now. Assuming that Phillips had no doubt left Omaha and vicinity by this time, the F.B.I., was brought into the case and a detailed description of the wanted man went out across the country—six feet tall, 180 pounds, plastic-rimmed glasses, clubbed fingers, maybe a mustache, dark-skinned.

Another clue turned up in the files of the packing house where Phillips had worked. On the company insurance plan Phillips had listed his grandmother as beneficiary, giving her address in Little Rock, Arkansas.

But when F.B.I. agents visited the little house in Little Rock and talked to the old woman whose name was on the insurance policy of John David Phillips, the woman denied that she had a son, grandson or any male in her family named John David Phillips. The woman gave them the names of all her children and her other living relatives, however, and the agents began a quiet check on each of them.

"Music to—'what' by?"

The old woman's granddaughter in Chicago said the description of John David Phillips fitted her boy friend. "But his name is George Daniel Jones, Jr.," the girl said naively. Yes, she admitted, George Jones came from Little Rock.

Meanwhile, a police artist had constructed a portrait of the missing suspect from descriptions compiled by the police department. The sketch was published in newspapers of Omaha, then went out over the wires to papers around the country.

The printing of the photograph in the papers brought a tip by telephone from a man who refused to give his name. Instead, he gave the name of a nineteen-year-old Indian girl. "Ask her about her boy friend, Joseph Brown," the informer said. "Get his address from her and visit him and I think you'll find Joseph Brown is your John David Phillips."

The girl's description of Joseph Brown fitted exactly that of John David Phillips, even to the scars on his right temple and eyelid and a four-inch scar in his right palm, and the gold-capped lower teeth.

She finally agreed to take the F.B.I. agents to the apartment in South Omaha where she had visited her boy friend. When she rang the door bell of the apartment she knew as Joseph Brown's, however, another man opened the door. The agents saw from the girl's surprised expression that she did not know the man, and it was evident that the man didn't know the girl.

They apologized to the man for the error and went away. But downstairs in the agent's car the girl looked worried and began to cry.

"I know something's happened to Joe," she sobbed. "I haven't heard from him in almost a week. And now that strange man in Joe's apartment, saying he never heard of Joe! I know something has happened to him!"

Both the girl and the owner of the apartment had insisted that Joseph Brown drove a red and white 1951 Oldsmobile. The girl had a snapshot of Brown and the agents took this. It was identified by several of the people who knew the missing man as Joseph Brown and it was identified by the packing house personnel and the landlady of the Emmet Street rooming house as the long saught John David Phillips.

Finally the photograph of Joseph Brown or John David Phillips was sent to the F.B.I. office in Little Rock and an agent took it out to the house of the old woman listed as beneficiary in John David Phillips' insurance policy. Reluctantly she admitted that the picture looked like George Daniel Jones, Jr., her granddaughter's boy friend. The old woman did not know that she had been made beneficiary in his insurance policy, nor did she know anything about Jones' whereabouts.

Other people in Little Rock also identified the photo as being George Jones, Jr., and a check on Jones in the Little Rock police files revealed that in 1954 Jones had been accused by a woman of stealing her purse and raping her.

On a Saturday night, July 20th, two F.B.I. agents picked him up in the Chicago subway. He had shaved off the mustache that he had worn as John David Phillips. He admitted to being George Daniel Jones, Jr., but denied any other name. He would not even admit to having been in Omaha, and he refused to return there with the agents voluntarily.

A sample of Jones' handwriting was sent to the Omaha packing house and compared to the endorsements of the salary checks of John David Phillips, and a handwriting expert in Chicago declared they were written by the same hand. When faced with this fact, Jones grudgingly admitted he had worked at the Omaha plant. But he denied knowing anything about the murders or rapings for which he was wanted.

But police and F.B.I. agents felt there was enough evidence to justify holding Jones and he was placed in jail in Chicago while extradition proceedings were started to get him back to Omaha.

On March 19, 1958, Jones was convicted of first degree murder in the district court of Douglas County, Nebraska in the death of Rita Kapperman.

He was sentenced to life imprisonment in Nebraska State Penitentiary. ■

the fire cooled some hours later to allow removal of a pile of ashes which once were the truck driver, hopes of solving that question vanished.

While I and millions of other Americans sleep, these men are bringing to us the food for our table, the clothes for our backs, the furniture for our homes and the cars for us to drive. One such car was that driven by a man who had just left a tavern, traveled a few blocks and came to the intersection of Lake Street, and US 12. He had the stoplight. I awoke abruptly to the crash, and looked out to see flames. Jumping from bed, I grabbed my camera and ran across the street to the scene.

There, amid a tangle of a broken telephone poles, downed electrical wires, and a broken stoplight, lay an overturned truck and partially crushed car. A quick investigation showed the two partially intoxicated occupants of the car had been pulled out of the flaming mess by another truck driver. But what about the first truck driver? His family learned from newspaper clippings that this father of six small children died a hero when he swerved to miss a car which ran through a red light.

When I ride with the state troopers on routine patrol, occasionally it will be necessary to stop a truck and hear the driver explain, "I'm sorry, officer, I just pulled out of that truck stop up the road, and forgot to turn them on."

Troopers who have worked several rear-end, two-truck collisions sometimes feel differently about such little acts of carelessness. I clearly remember the early morning that a truck driver tried to murmur some words to me, just before he died in the crumpled wreckage of his cab.

As you travel the highways, and pass a truck and he flicks his lights for you to pull back in, or you come upon an accident and see a truck driver lending a hand by directing traffic or using his rig to anchor a wrecker, just stop and think about their jobs, about how they must live and die, and then join with me to pray that all drivers were as courteous and skilled as these. ■ societies of evil magicians and witches, whose practices still send a shudder along the spines of those who have studied their dread secrets.

DEVIL'S MISTRESS

They were the Satanists—vulture-like creatures who fed on an epoch unsurpassed in its corruptness, its lustfulness, its brutality. This was the heyday of Louis XIV, the Sun-King. Outwardly gay, extravagant, brilliant, the monarch's court seethed below the surface with a festering of vile passions and vicious purposes. King's mistresses scheming to retain their power . . . court ladies poisoning husbands and lovers . . . sons murdering fathers . . . with the fearful "power of succession" or white arsenic . . . unwanted infants butchered . . . and all bloodily worshiping Satan in spirit and fact.

Out of the boiling stewpot sprang the Satanists of the Porte Saint-Denis. They were many, but the most sinister, the most venomous, was the human harpy known as Catherine Montovoison, popularly La Voison. To her perfumed, dark house on the Rue Beauregard streamed nobles and rich commoners, masked and cloaked and each suckling some evil purpose. In the murky, tapestried ground-floor "confessional" they would pay over huge sums to La Voison and her band of unfrocked priests and skilled murderers.

She was a voluptuous, white-faced woman with gleaming diamond-gray eyes. She invariably wore heavy brocaded robes. Her voice was low and toneless, her manner sensual and sinister. A humble woman by birth, she had been married to a haberdasher, Antoine Montovoison. Catherine started her professional career harmlessly enough as a mid-wife, dabbling in strange herbs and patent medicines. Later, she went in for horoscopes, fortune-telling and various types of necromancy. It was the demands of evil courtiers which finally led her along the paths of crime.

According to Nicholas de la Reynie, the police commissioner who finally encompassed her downfall, "Every morning that she rose people were waiting for her, and she had visitors for the rest of the day. After that, in the evening, she kept open house, engaged fiddlers and enjoyed herself thoroughly. She entered society. She was brought into fashionable drawing-rooms as the principal guest; pleasure parties from the Marais and Saint-Germain districts visited Villeneuve and were entertained on the lawns and beneath the shades of trees. They did not know that beneath the same shade, under those same lawns, were interred the bodies of infants murdered by La Voison and her gang—pitiful, unwanted infants of prostitutes, infants, too, of some of the fine ladies who disported themselves above the unmarked and unsuspected graves. For La Voison sank deeper and deeper into every form of vileness; her very success dragged her from slough to slough."

Again, W. Branch Johnson in his "The Age of Arsenic" wrote: "It was fundamentally her business sense that proved her undoing; in exploiting the credulity of her contemporaries she not merely fell foul of the law but sank below the lowest standards of decency. She trafficked in poisons of all sorts; she pandered to the licentiousness of the age; she performed or caused to be performed, innumerable illegal operations; she confessed to murdering two thousand five hundred infants; she was guilty of the grossest blasphemy and filthiest conduct in the performance of Black Masses."

It was in the latter that La Voison and her associates attained their greatest degree of vileness and horror. Her chief associate was an unfrocked priest—the Abbe Guibourg.

De La Reynie described this monster as follows: "Guibourg can be compared with no one else for the number of his poisonings and his traffic in poison and witchcraft. He is familiar with every form of villainy, guilty of a large number of horrible crimes and suspected of complicity in many others."

He was a hideous old man of seventy, bloated looking, his face mottled with bluish-reddish veins and blind in one eye. He claimed to be illegitimately descended from one of the great families of France. He had traveled widely and had a rare knowledge of human beings and their desires. He was the "spiritual" leader of La Voison's society, always at her service in crime.

As a poisoner he was an artist, having concocted many subtle toxics of his own. His favorite was a strange distillation of buttercups and crowfoot. The person who drank it died in spasms of laughter. Another poison was so virulent that merely to tread on it in bare feet was enough to bring certain and horrible death.

Guibourg achieved his greatest power as an officiator at the Black Masses. Women believed firmly that he could gain them the Devil's favor. The object of the Black Mass was to persuade the Prince of Darkness to grant some favor—the death of an enemy, the winning of some lover, or a thousand other desires. In order to gain Satan's approval a ghastly, obscene ritual had been devised. The altar consisted of a woman's nude body, often the supplicant herself. She lay flat on her back with arms outstretched. In each hand she held a black candle made of human fat. Similar candles formed a circle around her, casting their eerie shadows over her glistening flesh.

Guibourg, clad in robes covered with cabalistic symbols and assisted by a girl, began the horrible ritual. This was so horrible that one woman died of fright before it was over.

The black scriptures were contained in a huge book bound in human skin. The dark, vaulted chamber where the mass was celebrated was filled with foul-smelling incense, while foul water was sprinkled over the worshippers.

The ritual reached its climax in blood-letting. A naked infant would be brought forward, Guibourg would seize a long, sharp knife and draw it slowly over the infant's throat. The assistant would quickly catch the streaming blood in a chalice and, as the infant gasped its last, would pour it over the human altar. At the same time other nude assistants thrust the mutilated infant's body into a blazing furnace or buried it. Sometimes the entrails were ripped out and distilled, either to tell fortunes by as the old Romans did with the entrails of birds, or to titillate Satan's nostrils.

There was never any difficulty in obtaining these human sacrifices. La Voison knew just what to do with the unwanted babies that women brought her. And, in addition, there was a regular business throughout Paris between mid-wives and unmarried mothers. When the demand exceeded the supply, these dealers in human flesh kidnaped children.

In 1676 a newspaper reported that "there were seditious gatherings and disturbances in several parts of the city, through the rumor that people were carrying off children to cut their throats, though no one then understood what the cause of the rumor could be. But the mob, made furious by it, proceeded to various excesses against the women who were suspected of being child-stealers."

What became of these children, however, La Voison and Guibourg knew perfectly well. The answer was the unmarked cemetery beneath her lawn, where twenty-five hundred children were eventually to be burned or buried.

Guibourg's reputation as a celebrant of the Black Mass spread throughout the city and he no longer confined his activities to La Voison's lair. He was led all over—always blindfolded so that he would not know upon whom he had performed the ritual—into sub-cellars, secret basements, hideaways of all sorts.

Of all his clients the strangest and most powerful was the beautiful Madame de Montespan, mistress of the king. The story of her relationship with the Abbe Guibourg and La Voison is so characteristic of the whole, horrible practice of black magic that it is worth chronicling here in full.

Francoise-Athenais de Montespan, as beautiful as sin and more evil than sin itself, daughter of an impoverished nobleman, had spent her life at court since she was twenty. Her early duties consisted of consoling the queen while His Majesty dallied with his various mistresses. Eventually she married the Marquis de Montespan, bore him two children, one of which died, and slowly grew to hate her husband. Her secret desire was to become as powerful as the king's current mistress, Louise de la Valliere—indeed, to succeed her.

To encompass the death of Louise La Valliere she began visiting various magicians and mystic witnesses. At first she went to a couple known as Lesage and Mariette. They ripped out the hearts of two pigeons and pronounced spells against La Valliere. The police got wind of these forbidden rites. Lesage and Mariette were jailed for sorcery. Later, when Madame de Montespan achieved the power she wanted, they were released and raised to high positions.

Not in the least frightened or discouraged, Madame de Montespan next consulted La Voison and Guibourg. The latter started his incantations innocently enough with a ritual known as the Black Faggot. In the middle of a piece of wood he inserted incense and alum. The wood was then placed on a low fire and as it started to burn, Guibourg chanted: "Faggot, I burn thee, but it is the heart, the body, the soul, the blood, the mind, the spirit of Louise de la Valliere. By the heavens, by the earth, by the rainbow, by the twelve lines, by Mars, by Mercury and all the planets, may she be unable to rest in peace, to the very marrow of her bones. In the name of all the demons, depart, faggot, and consume the body, the soul, the power of action, the spirit, the mind of Louise de la Valliere, so that she may neither stand still, nor talk to any person, nor rest, nor mount a horse, nor cross a river, nor drink, nor eat, until the time when my desire and my will upon her be accomplished. Quanto, gui, garoco." Then before the faggot broke and the incense and alum lit, salt and wine were poured thrice over the flames with the words, "Ourne Tourne."

But this fantastic ritual failed to produce the desired results. And so Madame de Montespan agreed to take part in a Black Mass. Evidence adduced at the trial of La Voison has left a picture of what happened.

It was Leroy, governor of the king's pages, who first approached Guibourg with the idea of working for Madame de Montespan. He promised the abbe a huge sum of money for life.

Madame de Montespan refused at first to perform the function of living altar. This was done by another woman. Guibourg approached her nude body and intoned: "Astoroth, Asmodeus, Prince of Friendship, I pray you to accept the sacrifice, this child I offer you, for the things I ask of you . . . that the affection of the King and Monseigneur Dauphin may be assured to Madame de Montespan, and that she may be honored by the princes and princesses of the court, and that nothing she may ask of the King may be denied to her, to her kinsfolk or to her servants."

Five or six masses were said in this way during the ensuing years and it happened that de la Valliere fell desperately ill. Her illness ravaged her beauty. She aged and faded. The king promptly abandoned her and Madame de Montespan took a firm grasp of his affections. Guibourg crowed that his charms had worked. From then on Madame de Montespan was entirely under his dominance.

She was to have much use for the abbe and La Voison in the years to come. The king showed a renewed interest in his wife, the queen. Alarmed, Madame de Montespan sought Guibourg's help. This time she submitted her own body to the ritual of the Black Mass. As matters turned out, the king's brief renewal of interest in his wife died and for the next two years Madame de Montespan required no further assistance from La Voison and her hideous brood.

In 1675, however, another crisis occurred. Louis had been associated with the de Montespan for six years and court rumors had it that he was growing heartily tired of her. Indeed, the Bishop of Meaux, probably nerved by the lady's fall from grace, refused her entrance into the church. The ladies and gentlemen of the court rose against her and she was temporarily driven into retirement.

She emerged presently and made straight for the unholy shrine of the Abbe Guibourg. More blood was spilled, more secret rites carried out in the dead of night with de Montespan serving as human altar. Again, witchcraft seems to have saved her, for the king unaccountably took her back. She enjoyed another year of favor. It was the last.

Louis now became amazingly fickle, taking and discarding four beauties of the court in swift succession. The arrival at court of the famous Madame de Maintenon delivered the death-blow to Montespan's hopes. From the moment Louis set eyes upon Maintenon's charms he was deeply enamored.

Frantically, Madame de Montespan appealed to Guibourg. Now, all the excesses of hell were launched in her behalf. At the same time, La Voison formed a plot to murder Montespan's successor by means of a poisoned glove. Saturated in a deadly perfume, it was guaranteed to bring death at the first whiff.

But before this scheme could be put in action Commissioner de la Reynie, who had been quietly investigating her activities, arrested her. Montespan fled the court in time to save her own neck and was heard from no more.

With the arrest of La Voison the unspeakable scandal of Satanism, the intrigues, the poisoners and poisonings and all the rest of it, was dragged into blazing limelight. It created a sensation, which indirectly led to the French Revolution. The king expressed the deepest shock and ordered his police commissioner to delve down to the bottom of the affair.

For this purpose authorities established the terrible Chambre Ardente, or torture chamber, where all those connected with the Satanists were taken and submitted to unbearable agonies. Among them, of course, was La Voison herself.

She was taken into the Chambre Ardente and handed over to the tender mercies of the official torturer. He placed her upon a stool and thrust her body into the "buskin," a form of close-fitting leather jerkin which was slowly tightened by inserting wooden wedges, thus squeezing the breath from the prisoner.

DE LA REYNIE, who observed the entire scene with considerable pleasure, has left this account of it: "She was bound and warned to tell the truth and to say nothing of the names of accomplices or of acts upon which she had been questioned but what was the thruth. After which, M. Vesou, doctor, and Morel, master surgeon, were admitted to the room."

She was first questioned about certain lady clients who desired to procure the deaths of their husbands. De La Reynie's account continues: "She said she had never been to Saint-Germain, had never taken powders there, nor known a Mlle. Desoeillets, nor had dealings with her. She had said all she knew about the Comtesse de Soissons and had nothing to add to it, nor about Madame d'Alluye, having nothing to add to that either.

"Urged to tell the truth, she insisted she had told it. At the first wedge she had nothing more to say, she had told the truth, as witness God.

"She knew nothing and had taken nothing to Saint-Germain, neither powders nor anything else. At the second wedge she cried 'Ah, God, Ah, Holy Virgin!' but said no more.

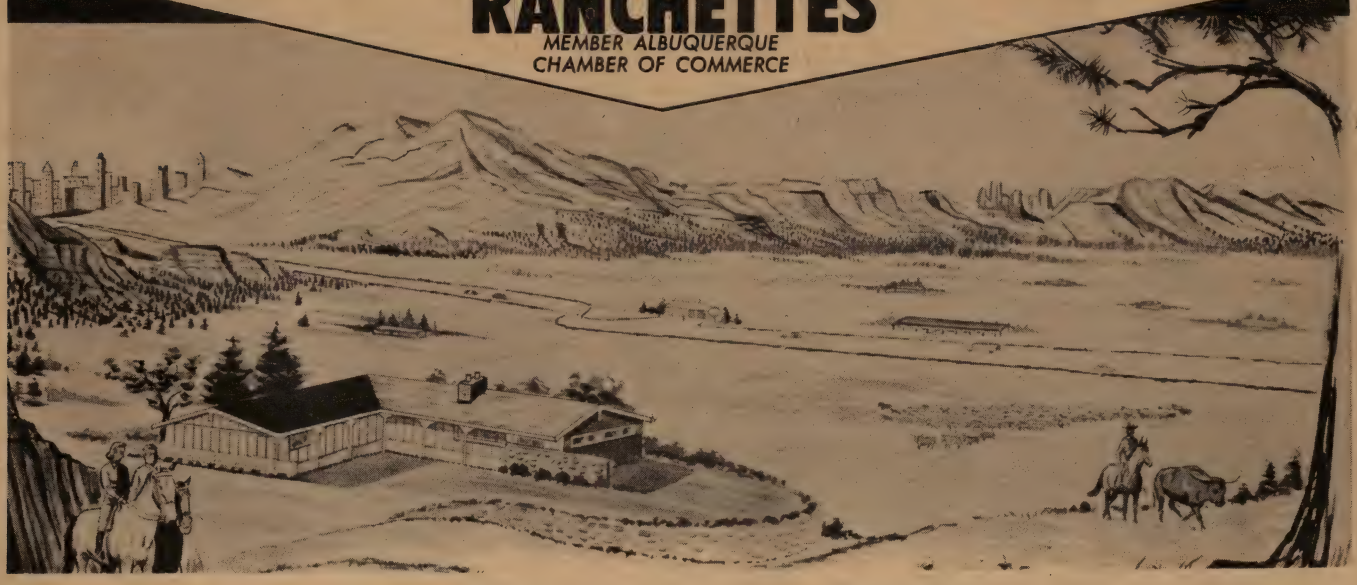
ALBUQUERQUE, NEW MEXICO . . .

An Acre of Your Own in

THE VALLEY OF THE ESTANCIA RANCHETTES

MEMBER ALBUQUERQUE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE



FULL ACRE FULL PRICE $395

ONLY $10 DOWN A MONTH

Suddenly — almost without warning — the land boom is on in New Mexico. All at once Americans have discovered the "Land of Enchantment". . . and homes and ranchettes are springing up on lush verdant tracts which until now were enormous ranches.

And especially is this true of the lovely valleys surrounding Albuquerque, the queen of New Mexico. This exciting city is bursting at the seams and homes are spilling out in all directions. Albuquerque has become America's "7th fastest growing city" — and is picking up speed at an astounding tempo.

Astounding? Please consider: In 1940 Albuquerque had less than 36,000 people. By 1950 it had soared to 97,000. And in the last 10 years it has rocketed to more than 260,000!

There are so many reasons for this fantastic rate of growth. Nowhere in America is there land more beautiful than the rich valleys that rim Albuquerque. The climate is possibly without equal in all of America — a summertime of balmy sunny days* and bracing nights — blanket-sleeping nights; and in the winter equally sunny days* — shirt-sleeve weather. Health? This is a region whose mildness and purity of climate have given new life to people from all parts of our land — where, in respiratory ailments alone, thousands of cures have been miraculously achieved by the mild weather, the dry air, the abundant sunshine, the low humidity. In the words of the Encyclopedia Brittanica the Albuquerque region is "a health resort"! And what about sports, entertainment, activities, opportunity? In the lofty close-by mountains are fishing, swimming, hunting. Skiers wear shorts. Golf is played the year 'round. Albuquerque itself is crammed with magnificent shops, theatres, churches, schools — including the University of New Mexico with 7000 enrolled students, bright new college buildings and modern football stadium. Albuquerque has the 5th busiest airport in the United States. Its industry and employment potential are boundless. Its 3 television channels and 9 radio stations, its opportunties in land ownership, jobs, small business; its sunniness, its freshness and sparkle — all of these mark the personality of a great city.

The wonder is not that Albuquerque is growing so rapidly. The wonder is that one can still buy a lovely piece of land close to the city at so low a price as $395 an acre! All you have to do is to take a look at the six cities which in all of America have grown even faster than Albuquerque. What would you have to pay for an acre of comparable land only 39 miles from their shops and theaters?

(These figures include outside Central City)

	Population	Rate of Rise 1950-1960	Cost Per Acre of Comparable Land 39 Miles from Downtown
1. San Jose, Calif.	639,615	120.1%	$2,500 — $ 5,000
2. Phoenix, Arizona	652,032	96.5	$3,500 — $ 7,000
3. Tucson, Arizona	262,139	85.6	$1,500 — $ 3,000
4. Miami, Florida	917,851	85.4	$5,000 — $10,000
5. Sacramento, Cal.	500,719	80.7	$2,000
6. San Diego, Cal.	1,003,522	80.2	$4,000 — $ 8,000
7. Albuquerque, N. M.	260,318	78.7	$395 (Valley of The Estancia Ranchettes)

* Last year for example, there were only 8 days that were not sunny.

These statistics are eye-openers, aren't they? Yet real estate men are saying that the prices you have just read will soon apply to the Albuquerque region!

And as lovely and luxuriant an area as Albuquerque can boast is The Valley of the Estancia Ranchettes. Rimmed by mountains, lying flush alongside the most important highway in the West, Route 66, and only 39 miles from Albuquerque, The Valley of the Estancia Ranchettes is the essence of the enchanting Southwest. Please read this carefully! The Valley of the Estancia Ranchettes are not barren desert tracts. They are lush and green! Water waits to be tapped. The soil is so fertile as to bear fruit trees and truck gardens. Our Route 66 neighbors frame the landscape with their low modern ranchettes, homes, motels. Our next door neighbor is the famed $200,000 Longhorn Museum of the Old West . . . Oh yes, this is a very lovely land.

As our headline says, an acre in our beautiful VALLEY OF THE ESTANCIA RANCHETTES costs $395 complete! And the terms are $10 down and $10 a month per acre. That's it — no extras, no hidden additional costs. You may reserve as many acres as you wish. AND YOU TAKE NO RISK IN SENDING YOUR $10 TO RESERVE YOUR ONE ACRE RANCHETTE SITE. Your $10 reserves an acre for you, but you have the unqualified right to change your mind. As soon as we receive your reservation we will send you your Purchase Agreement and Property Owner's Kit. The package will show you exactly where your property is and will include full maps, photographs and complete information about your property. Other maps will show you nearby Arizona — even old Mexico itself, 250 miles away. You may have a full 30 day period to go through this fascinating portfolio, check our references, talk it over with your family. If during that time you should wish to change your mind (and you don't have to give a reason either) your reservation deposit will be instantly refunded. (ALBUQUERQUE BANK REFERENCES).

Experienced realtors think that the Albuquerque area presents the most exciting acreage buy in America. On the outskirts of the city, land is now going for $5000 to $6000 an acre. One day soon the Valley of the Estancia Ranchettes could be a suburb of Albuquerque. Act now. You'll be forever grateful that you did.

"At the third wedge she cried more loudly and pleaded for pity. She had told the truth; she had never taken any powders to Saint-Germain and knew nothing more about the ladies de Soissons and d'Alluye than what she had already said.

"At the fourth wedge she cried tremendously, but said nothing."

This iron-willed woman bore the most horrible of tortures while four more wedges tightened the buskin around her. Then and only then she broke, admitting that "she felt obliged, in order to ease her conscience, that a large number of persons of all ranks and conditions had applied to her for the death of, or the means of doing away with many persons, and that debauchery was the chief incentive of these disorders."

And with that she was dragged out to the Place de Greve, public scaffold, placed upon a pile of faggots, and slowly roasted to death. Before the end came she had screamed out enough to make it possible to proceed against other members of her vile society.

As a result of these dying statements, other lesser societies of Satanists were exposed and dully smashed. There was the Abbe Bouchot who debauched and murdered whole armies of women in the worship of the Devil.

With the exception of Guibourg, the Abbe Lemignan was the worst of the lot. This grizzled, huge, old man had an obsession. That obsession was buried treasure. As a result of the recent wars of the Fronde—a species of civil wars—many noble families had buried their plate, silver, gold and jewels in secret caches, usually underground. But often, it happened, these families were either killed or exiled. Only the treasure remained.

A frantic scramble was started to recover the various treasures. But who could tell where to look? The Devil, whispered the Satanists. And so his Mephistophelian Majesty was enlisted once more to locate secret fortunes. Another bloody, obscene ritual was devised and more or less standardized. The celebrant would perform over the suspected cache and exhort Satan to indicate the exact location of the treasure. Often a woman about to deliver a child would be used in the ritual. She would be placed in a circle of flickering candles. When the child was born, it would either be battered to death before her eyes as a sacrifice to Satan, or taken elsewhere and murdered in secret.

Chief among the practitioners of treasure-hunting by witchcraft was Lemignan. La Joly, a female of La Voison's crew, once visited him in his lodgings accompanied by a poisoner called Meline. She later told the inquisitioners of the Chambre Ardente: "Lemignan at once raised a piece of evil tapestry and showed behind it an earthenware basin, and in the basin were the bodies of two baby boys about seven months old. They had been cut into several pieces, which were in the basin and the blood was very red and fresh. Meline touched the two bodies, and finding them warm, asked whether they had been alive when sacrificed; to which he answered that he had nothing to say to that, but he and Meline would do something even better."

Lemignan, however, defended himself so eloquently before the Chambre Ardente that he got off with a light eight-year sentence of exile.

Not so the Abbe Mariette, who paid with his life for a career of vileness and horror. Mariette came of excellent family. He started off early by poisoning a brother. He next lent himself to the celebration of Black Masses and for this was banished from Paris. He soon returned, however, and swore allegiance to the black banner of La Voison. His first assignment was to cause the liquidation of Madame Lefron's husband. This he accomplished by arming the woman with a subtle mixture of arsenic and powdered toad's skull, and the wretched husband died in agonizing convulsions.

He next hired himself out to the Comtesse de Polignax, another lady of the Court, ambitious to become a king's mistress. Indeed, a large percentage of the business of La Voison's disciples came from these women. Mariette celebrated a Black Mass on the body of a servant girl, slaughtering two children in the process. The de Polignac did not realize her ambitions, but Mariette netted some $100,000.

Mariette was likewise involved in the affairs of the Madame de Montespan and when the titanic plot crashed he fled immediately to Bordeaux where he was protected by a former client, the Vicomte de Couserans. Six months later de la Reynie's agents ferretted him out and dragged him back to Paris. He escaped the stake, but the torture was more than he could stand and he died in prison, shrieking for Satan to come to his aid.

mostly in poisons, the Abbe Dubousquet and a trunk maker called Gerard were supreme. They devised this cunning method of giving death: they would smear a compound of soft soap and arsenic inside the toe of a boot and leave a nail slightly exposed. Thus, the wearer would prick his foot and the poison would enter his blood. Death was slow, excruciatingly painful, and certain.

Other master poisoners of La Voison's band were Dulong, Godin de Sainte-Croix and Lemperier, while the following perfected themselves in certain Satanic specialites: Cotton celebrated Black Masses on obscene wax figures designed to obtain love or death as desired by the client; Lepreux dealt exclusively in consecrating venomous snakes for foul Black Mass uses; Tournet and Lemour said Black Masses over the bodies of female lechers to ward off the consequences of their lechery; Malescot, Seysoon and Gabriel did a thriving business in still-born babies to be used in the concoction of love powders and poisons.

Author Johnson has epitomized this entire vile crew in the following revealing passage: "Since practically all the priests and mid-wives whom we have had occasion to mention were directly or indirectly known to La Voison and carried out at least some of the abominations in her attic with the big stove, we are now able to pass a sounder judgment upon the house in the Rue Beauregard and upon its principal tenant. No lewder or fouler house can have existed in Paris at that time or since, a house which might well be wholly demolished, its stones destroyed and its timbers burned, to obliterate it utterly from the sight of man. But if fine shades of distinction may be drawn between men and women all utterly vile, its most terrifying occupant was not La Voison herself. Though she was ready to go to any length in order to obtain the wealth and public consideration she craved, she does not appear to have been naturally loathsome, as Guibourg, for instance, was loathsome. Her part was rather to direct crime and perversion to an even completer expression of themselves, to incite waverers and to animate enthusiasts, to employ her many and influential social contacts in winning new converts to infamy, and in bringing cowards, fools and rogues into the net spread for their destruction by the devineresses, witches, mid-wives and depraved priests. Such a task fell to her not by organization but by natural aptitude; she was a woman of exceptionally forceful character and of acute, though erratic, intelligence, who dominated her allies in evil as she was able to dominate some of the most famous men and women in France. It is the intensity with which she subjugated her life to business instincts—her absolute callousness, in short—which stabs us even now more sharply than it did when we knew her less; she was the exploiter of every sort of vileness. Were it not for a certain vague sincerity which distinguishes her from most of her associates, this exploitation would rank in nauseating depravity even below Guibourg; without the least wish to condone a single one of her actions, may it not be admitted that her sincerity, even in superstition and evil, does lift her to the position of being worthier of our regard than most of the human beasts whose company she affected?"

As the reader considers this appalling chronicle of madness and murder, lust and evil, he doubtless congratulates himself on living in the twentieth century, telling himself—such things can't happen any more. In that, he is wrong. Fantastic as it may seem, black magic and kindred forms of orgiastic rites are practiced even today.

By his own admission and evidence adduced during an English trial, the sinister man known as Alistair Crowley, calling himself variously "Beast 666" and "Baphomet XI, Supreme and Holy King of Ireland and High Priest of the Thelemites," has widely practiced black magic in its most obscene form. When Crowley in 1934 brought a suit against author Nina Hammett for revealing his practices in her book, "Laughing Torso," the jury was so revolted by the evidence that the case was brought to a halt.

They found in favor of the defendant, upholding her statements that Crowley practiced black magic. Justice Swift declared: "Never have I heard such dreadful, horrible, blasphemous, abominable stuff as that produced by this perverted man Crowley."

Most of the evidence at the trial was unprintable, especially that dealing with the life that Crowley's disciples led in the Temple of Theleme at Cefalu, a Sicilian village. According to witnesses, the utter abandon that prevailed at the temple was under the guise of cultish devotion. The creed of the cult was:

"Do what thou wilt shall be the whole of the law!"

One room in the Temple was described as "nightmare room," which was adorned with indescribably lewd pictures and into which novitiates were taken to be "initiated."

The impulses which motivated such Satanists as Abbe Guibourg and La Voison are unfortunately not yet dead. ■

LOVE STARVED QUEEN

weirdo fell madly in love with an ugly, mishapen little creature, Elizebeth Vorontsov, the Princess of Kurland.

For a period of nearly seventeen years Catherine went through a veritable hell on earth. Deprived of the love of her legal mate, she turned to other males. Her strong, sturdy physique demanded an endless stream of lovers. On ascending the throne after Elizabeth's death, the moronic Peter proceeded unwittingly to do everything possible to alienate and outrage the court attendants and the people of Russia for his love for his homely mistress and the Prussian way of life. Catherine, the direct opposite of her nitwit spouse in intelligence, was popular due to her good relations with the dignities of the regime.

With the help of her most fiery lover, Gregory Orloff and his equally reckless brothers, she had Peter II seized in a coup d'etat and imprisoned. Later, while still under arrest, in what historians believe was a frameup, he became embroiled in a drunken quarrel with Prince Feodor Baratinski, and in the ensuing fight was killed.

With the reins of power now fully in her hands, Catherine proceeded, by wars, treaties and the introduction of European culture, to make the backward country of Russia into one of the great nations of the world. But hand in hand with her efficient conduct of domestic and foreign affairs, she now gave full sway to her notoriously licentious manner of life. It did not bother her in the least what effect her loose morals would have on the gossip of her own court and people, or the world at large. Truly her statement, "What I do concerns no one but myself," was now more than ever her philosophy of life.

Even while Grand Duchess, her personality was so formidable that the experienced mysterman, the secret diplomatic agent Chevalier d'Eon, reported: "She is romantic, ardent, passionate. Her eyes are brilliant, their look fascinating and glassy—the look of a wild beast. Her forehead is lofty and, if I am not mistaken, a long and terrifying future is written on it. She is prepossessing and affable, but when she comes close to me I instinctively recoil. She frightens me."

Were we thrilled when Jim sold his first story!

It was a family affair, Jim supplying the imagination, and I the encouragement. Result: a check for $250, and a bright-looking future.

It happened after I'd read a Palmer ad and sent for their book. It explained how people make good money writing; how even ordinary experiences can be turned into interesting stories once you learn how. So Jim decided to enroll. Evenings were filled with excitement as he learned how to put a story together. Then, thanks to Palmer, he completed one—and it sold. Honestly, we're as thrilled as a couple of kids!

The Chevalier was a true prophet. For underneath her pleasant appearance and seemingly gracious charm, there lurked in truth the nature of a lustful lioness. A complete autocrat, like the queen of the jungle, Catherine did with her life, her morals, her subjects and the wealth of her nation exactly as she pleased. Without the slightest qualm of conscience she committed adultery with at least a hundred men. She murdered, or caused to be murdered, her husband Czar Peter II; young Ivan VI, great-grandson of the elder brother of Peter The Great; the army officer Morovich, who plotted to restore Ivan to his rightful throne; Emelian Pugatcheff, the Cossack rebel, leader of the serf's revolt in 1773, and many others too numerous here to recount.

But it was Catherine's assembly-line of male companions for which she was best known to the world. Of the conservative number of one hundred, more than three-fourths were little more than playthings to this masterly woman. Taking many of them from obscurity, she threw them aside carelessly when she had enough. But two of them helped her make history, and one is famed in Soviet Russia even to this day. Some were chosen by herself, others suggested for her inspection. As soon as one was chosen an immediate scramble began to find his successor, for Catherine discarded her lovers as a child would a toy.

In the early years there was an interval between the removal of one Favorite and the acquisition of another. But in the last twenty years this exchange, with methodical thoroughness, was arranged beforehand. For Catherine's procurers were ever mindful of her philosophy—"My heart cannot be content for even an hour without love."

Her first four lovers came during the bleak years of her marriage to her witless husband, Grand Duke Peter, heir to the throne. The first, Soltokoff, handsome, but an ignoramus, quickly tired of his easy conquest and departed the country. The second, Stanlius Poniatowsky, a man of charm, elegance and the intellectuality of the Paris salons, was recalled to his native Poland and afterwards rewarded by his patroness with the Polish crown. The third, Elughine, was a mere shadow, a cardboard figure in the cast. But the fourth, Gregory Orloff, ranks as the first Favorite who helped Catherine make Russia one of the powerful nations of the world.

Gregory Orloff was a proud, headstrong, fiery army officer. Tall, handsome, always ready for any dare-devil escapade, with his four gigantic brothers Gregory organized the revolt which overthrew Peter and placed Catherine on the throne. Indeed, the son of Orloff and Catherine—Bobrinsky—was born on the very eve of that palace revolution in 1762.

The status of a "kept man" was a constant goad to this otherwise independent male. Struggling violently to maintain his self-respect, Orloff tried constantly to force his will on Catherine, continually quarreling with her over trivial things. To assert his manliness he began to have affairs with other women which he made no effort to conceal.

For the next ten years Gregory Orloff had possibly as much to do with ruling the nation as Catherine. Though she undoubtedly loved her fiery paramour, Catherine feared him also. For what Gregory and his four lawless brothers had done to her husband, might they not also do to her if she aroused her wrath? This constant danger was the probable cause of her continual appeasement toward Orloff's peccadilloes with the opposite sex. But in 1772 an incident warned Catherine to act before it was too late.

In that year, the eleventh of their amoral partnership, the Czarina sent Gregory to attend negotiations for peace with Turkey. In his absence she learned that he had been conducting an illicit affair with a young girl, Zinoviev, his own thirteen-year-old cousin. Overwhelmed by the disgrace and jealousy of this immoral disclosure, Catherine at last resolved to break completely with her unfaithful lover. On the advice of her chief counselor, who was fearful of Orloff's power and arrogance, she took on as favorite a mild, innocuous army officer named Wassiltchoff.

On learning of this move, Orloff hastily returned to St. Petersburg. But Catherine had a messenger meet him outside the city with orders that he go to his estate at Gachin. Obeying reluctantly, he first wrote asking for an audience. When she refused—fearful that she would capitulate to his strong personality he penned her angry, threatening letters. At this, Catherine had guards, doubled within the palace.

To use force on the man she loved was repellant to the Czarina. So she restorted to bribery. Orloff was given the title of Prince, all manner of costly presents, including land and a thousand serfs. Catherine attached only one condition to these gifts. She requested that he absent himself from the court for at least a year. When he did appear two years later Catherine had finished her pallid affair with Wassiltchoff and was deeply involved with the one man in her love life who could be considered her intellectual. equal.

This was Gregory Alexandrovich Potemkin, one of the most gifted men in all Russian history.

Born of an impoverished army colonel who died when Gregory was seven, the boy was thrown on his own resources, his mother caring little about the welfare of her offspring. He became an excellent linguist and classical scholar, studiously applying himself to history, music, literature and theology. He gained high scholastic honor at the recently opened University of Moscow. For a while he wavered between church orders, foreign study and army as his choice of profession, finally selecting the latter. In military circles he soon became acquainted with the Orloff brothers, sharing in their rake-hell exploits of drinking, gambling and wenching.

In appearance Potemkin was easily the most unprepossessing of all Catherine's lovers. Physically gigantic, he was a prototype of the traditional moody, tempestuous Russian. He had a gargantuan appetite for the pleasures of the flesh and despite his lack of good looks, countless women found him irresistible. Potemkin's liquor imbibing habits were of heroic proportions. He was both a connoisseur of fine foods and a ravenous glutton. His mercurial temperament could change him in minutes from a gay, considerate, gentle person, to a cantankerous, insulting, profane boor.

For the first two years of Potemkin's varying moods of affection, sulsk, endearments and quarrels, Catherine loved this tumultuous but brilliant man with her whole heart and soul. Offices, titles, priceless jewels, grants of lands and money, showered on her "Adjutant-General." An office whose duties, both physical and mental, were for the first time performed with manly vigor and efficiency.

But despite the countless favors bestowed on him, Potemkin was incorrigible. And even through all the rapture and sorrows of two years of heavenly bliss intermingled with periods of tearful hell, Catherine's keen intellect was aware of this fact. While she would put up with his tantrums, permit him to rule as her coequal, she absolutely refused to let him dominate the affairs of state. This power she held to grimly like the true autocrat she was.

For while Potemkin undoubtedly loved the Empress, he loved power even more. But he was aware that if he carried his ill-humor too far, he might, like Gregory Orloff, be suddenly dismissed from his seat of prestige.

THE BREAK, deliberately intiated by Potemkin, came when he demanded Catherine discharge her secretary, Zavanowsky. She refused on the grounds that it would be unjust to an innocent man. The enemies of Potemkin rejoiced, figuring that as in Gregory Orloff's case, he had lost not only favor but influence as well. They quickly realized they were wrong. The friendship of Catherine and Potemkin lasted as long as both lived. He retained his offices and poured out his boundless energies in conquering and colonizing lands to the south while continuing to exchange affectionate letters with his sovereign. His appetites, however, remained undimmed. He consoled himself by affairs with his five pretty nieces, Varvara above all.

The next mate chosen—by Potemkin's enemy, the Counselor Panin—was the secretary, Zavanowsky, a colorless man who did not last long. Potemkin, still wielding influence, picked as his successor, Zotich, son of a Yugoslavian officer in the Russian army. Though close to middle age, this man let the honor go to his head, his jealousy causing him to threaten to cut off the ears of any rivals daring to bid for his ruler's grace. He was pensioned off in less than a year in the usual way with a grant of lands and serfs, retiring and living like a perfumed Sultan in oriental splendor on his estate.

After Zoritch came Kersakov whose main attraction seemed to be a fine tenor voice. This union ended abruptly in fifteen months when it was discovered that he was carrying on an affair with the chief "male tester," Countess Bruce. The guilty pair were summarily banished from the court.

Once more Potemkin chose the favorite. This was Jermoloff, a stopgap figure who could not satisfy his ruler's intense desire for love. He was dismissed shortly after and still another protégé of Potemkin, Mamonoff, took his place.

Mamonoff was better educated, more refined and intelligent than his predecessor. Catherine was happy with her new toy and he could have kept his Adjutant-General's post until her demise had he not fallen in love with another. Bitter at this so-called "treason," the Empress mourned: "I cannot express how much I have suffered." But later she forgave her unfaithful lover and his spouse with this statement: "God grant them happiness."

The last of the favorites, Platon Zuboff, another twenty-two year old lieutenant, was picked by Catherine herself without consultation with Potemkin. He demanded the lieutenant's dismissal but Catherine, bewitched from the start by this handsome young man, refused his demand. "I have come back to life," she wrote Potemkin, "like a frozen fly."

Zuboff ranks with Orloff and Potemkin in the influence he exerted over the aging Catherine. Her usual keen judgment, possibly dulled by advancing years, deserted her in appraising this vain, empty-headed, unscrupulous young adventurer. Little by little as his powers increased, Zuboff filled the court with his relatives and friends, none with the slightest ability to carry out the duties of the offices they were assigned.

Behind Catherine's back people made fun of both her lover's performance and her own foolish antics with a man who intellectually wasn't fit to clean the mud off her boots. But all levity banished in her presence. Imposing dignity and imperial poise never deserted her.

While busy writing at her desk one morning, she toppled to the floor. Death came thirty-six hours later.

Thus at the age of sixty-seven passed one of the most incredible females in history. One of the most wanton yet most brilliant rulers of all time. ■ words were most eerily prophetic.

The very next day, on an insignificant dusty road in the heart of Africa, the world's leading foreign correspondent was killed in a violent skirmish as tragic and senseless as the whole bloody Congo strife.

When he landed first in Leopoldville, Taylor found the Congo capital in a state of complete chaos. Belgian nationals, fleeing the rapine and terror of the newly-independent Africans, had left all of the city's vital industries in the hands of untrained natives, who hadn't the slightest idea of how to make them run. Worse still, the smoldering city was ripe with hundreds of wild rumors.

"The Russians are coming any minute!" some whispered. "Belgian paratroopers are dropping from the sky outside of the city!" others reported. Still more heard that cannibals were eating every white person they found. The natives, totally unprepared for the freedom which had been thrust upon them, were in a mood to believe anything.

Taylor, true to his instincts to head for the sound of violence, decided to leave the maddened city and go to the back country, where the main action was centered.

He and two other journalists, Andre Lefevre of Paris Match (who was to make the tragic pictures on these pages), and Christian D'Epenoux of the French News Service, asked the Congo commander at the town of Bakwanga, Major David Nzoigba, if they could go along on a mission with his troops.

The major agreed to send the trio of newsmen along on what he called an "orientation operation" against a rebellious village—Lukelenge, some eight miles from Bakwanga and near the heart of the local anti-government forces.

Three truckloads of 100 heavily-armed Congolese troops and a truck equipped with a loudspeaker went on ahead of the car carrying the journalists. Outside of Lukelenge, everyone piled out of their trucks and the loudspeaker began broadcasting a message of peace, promising safety and protection to the local Baluba tribesmen if they would give up their arms and local fighting against the forces of Lumumba.

But the tribesmen, who had been the victims of savage attacks and massacres by these very same forces, weren't quite ready to lay down their weapons. About 150 of them, carrying everything from the latest Belgian automatic rifles to homemade guns and even spears, poisoned arrows and machetes, came slowly forward from their huts to listen. Some were nearly naked, with leaves in their hair; a few had regular army uniforms with helmets which they had probably stolen from dead Congolese troops.

The Balubas began to talk and argue with the government soldiers, who spread out along the road in an attempt to keep order. As the discussion went on, more and more of the anti-Lumumba tribesmen poured from the surrounding jungle to swell their ranks to alarming size. Some of the natives said they would give up their weapons if the government troops would put theirs in a truck first and drive it away. Of course, the Congolese officers refused to do this.

For almost three hours, the talking continued in this vein, with the Balubas becoming more and more belligerent. Finally, Taylor and his companions estimated that they were outnumbered by about ten to one. Some 1,000 tribesmen were milling

For the first time science has found a new healing substance with the astonishing ability to shrink hemorrhoids and to relieve pain — without surgery.

In case after case, while gently relieving pain, actual reduction (shrinkage) took place.

Most amazing of all — results were so thorough that sufferers made astonishing statements like "Piles have ceased to be a problem!"

The secret is a new healing substance (Bio-Dyne®) — discovery of a world-famous research institute.

This substance is now available in suppository or ointment form under the name Preparation H®. Ask for it at all drug counters.

and pushing around their trucks, coming in closer and closer as they began to realize their superior strength.

The three newsmen found themselves being called communists and spies by the angry tribesmen.

"Go back to your Red bosses and tell them we want to be free!" they shouted, jostling the newsmen and cursing at them in African.

When the three men tried to explain that they were journalists, the natives were unable to understand. They persisted in believing that the three were the leaders of the Congolese forces, sent by Russia to turn them out of their homes and enslave them.

Suddenly, a tribesman with glazed eyes that could have come from smoking hemp, charged them, waving a machete wildly. A group of Congo troops subdued him just in time, but the other Balubas were becoming more and more vicious.

The government forces had set up a mortar in position to shell the village in case any serious trouble started, and Taylor and his companions walked over to inspect it. This only served to convince the frightened tribesmen that these white men, dressed as they were in khaki, had been sent to destroy them. They crowded in closer and closer, and one young Baluba snatched a camera from Lefevre's shoulder and dared him to try and take it back. The Frenchman decided it wasn't worth the chance of starting a wholesale slaughter.

A hurried conference between the Congolese officers and the newsmen decided then that it was high time for them all to get the hell out of there as fast as possible. With more and more overheated Balubas arriving every minute, any small incident could touch off a massacre.

The scattered troops pulled themselves together and headed for their trucks, and the three journalists turned to their own car for the trip to the town of Tsilenge, where negotiations were to continue.

Lefevre climbed into the car and sat at the wheel. Then, a tribesman armed with a revolver pushed him aside, saying: "Move over, I am driving!" Lefevre moved over.

Taylor, who had been driving the car up until then, tried to get in and found the Baluba sitting there impassively.

"Let him drive, Henry!" Lefevre pleaded. "Come over to my side and sit here." At that moment, the shooting began.

As Taylor put his hands on the door to join Lefevre, a burst of automatic fire that moved all the way up his body from his right thigh to his chest sent him sprawling into the dusty roadway. Who had fired the first shots, the Balubas or an overanxious Congo soldier, was never discovered.

Henry Taylor, still breathing but near death, wrote his last story in his own blood.

Inside the car, the unarmed Lefevre flattened himself on the floor as for ten excruciating minutes wave after wave of firing ripped through the automobile.

Suddenly, the door above his head was torn open and he saw a huge Congolese soldier cocking his automatic pistol.

For a long moment nothing happened.

"It's all over for me," the Frenchman thought, but the soldier held the revolver just above his head and pointed to the Baluba tribesman still crouched in the front seat. The native grabbed Lefever's arm and tried to hide behind him, screaming, "No, no!" as the soldier calmly took aim. He fired three times and half the tribesman's face and most of his brains were blown all over the car windows.

At any minute, Lefevre expected the Congolese to turn the pistol on him. But the door slammed shut and he found himself alone with the nearly headless body. As the shooting slowed up, he peeped up warily through the shattered and bloody windshield and saw another government soldier standing in front of the car, pointing an automatic. Lefevre waved, and the soldier stepped back three paces and opened fire. He was aiming under the car where three tribesmen had hidden, and the French photographer could hear the bullets ripping into their bodies directly beneath him.

Lefever opened the door, his hands shaking so badly he had to use both to turn the handle. A few feet away, the bullet-shattered body of Henry Taylor, now quite still, lay soaking the dirt red.

At that moment D'Epenoux approached and, although they had known each other for years, each of them held out his hand and introduced himself. They were very serious about it.

There still was a good deal of shooting going on, although the tide had turned, at least for the time being, in favor of the better-armed Congolese forces. Bodies of dead and wounded men of both sides littered the area, and from time to time a group of Balubas would charge the main body of Congo troops, only to be cut down in seconds by bursts of automatic rifle fire. The troops were now out of control.

At one point, an old tribesman ran out of a hut toward the two reporters, carrying a "pu pu"—a weapon made from an old water pipe and filled with gun powder and scraps of metal. The Baluba was stabbing at the "pu pu" with a cigarette, trying to make it go off, when a Congolese soldier ran up and shoved his bayonet through the old man's neck.

As the two Frenchmen got back into their battered, bullet-scarred car, they heard the Congo troops shouting "To the attack!" and watched as a group of soldiers finished off wounded tribesmen with their bayonets. One soldier, captured forever in a portrait of senseless violence by Lefevre's only remaining camera, repeatedly drove his blade into the already lifeless body of a tribesman, while a companion looked on calmly.

The government forces piled back into their trucks, taking with them the bodies of Taylor and their other dead and wounded. The journalists found their car completely useless, so they too clambered aboard the crowded truck.

Three miles up the road, the trucks met reinforcements that were coming to their rescue. They learned later that a Congolese sergeant had managed, by using his head, to escape and go for help. During discussions with the angry tribesmen, one Baluba had pointed to a recoiless 77 mm. field gun that the government troops had brought. "You bring a cannon to use against your own brothers?" he asked the sergeant fiercely.

The gun was placed some 200 yards up the road. "All right," the sergeant said, seeing he was hopelessly outnumbered, "I'll go get the gun and bring it to you to prove we mean you no harm." He trotted off down the road, expecting a bullet in the back at any moment, and instead of going to the cannon he leaped into a jeep and made off for help.

His resourcefulness and courage saved many lives.

In the hospital, after the heat of the battle died down, some of the government troops began to realize what had happened. They had taken part in the killing of some of their own people, to protect an idea that meant little or nothing to them. The troops threw their helmets on the ground, cursed and ranted at their officers.

Even in death, the Congo held no peace for Henry Taylor. Next day, when an American Embassy plane landed at the tiny airport in Luluabourg to pick up his body and bring it back to Leopoldville, twelve Congolese soldiers tried to board the plane and take the American airmen prisoners.

President Eisenhower telephoned Talyor's father, U.S. Ambassador to Switzerland Henry J. Taylor, to express his personal sympathy, and released this statement to the public:

"The death in the Congo of Henry N. Taylor is a tragic loss to the newspaper profession and to the country. Killed in the line of duty, his name joins the honor role of other American reporters who have given their lives to the cause of a free press."

He went wherever the danger was, as long as there was a story. But for Henry Taylor, the tangled politics of a new nation changed the odds. Always a gambler where danger versus the chance of a scoop were concerned, this time he wound up the loser.

The insignificant corner of a dirty village makes far from a fitting end for a life spent in search of truth by one of our truly great correspondents. ■

LONDON GIRLS

Simpson, London Metropolitan Police Commissioner and head of Scotland Yard issued a "gloomy report." With cold facts and statistics, he reported that London has had its highest crime rate ever in the last year and indications are that it is getting worse.

Driving the girls underground has brought about other methods of soliciting which are baffling police in their pseudo-legality.

According to the Constabulary report, in some circles the belief is widespread that crime does pay and, after a year, the dirt beneath the carpet is fermenting in its own prosperity.

The raising of "protection" money charges has increased gang warfare.

Low class restaurants and cafes, clubs and dives are ransacked when they refuse so-called protection. A Maltese bartender who refused admittance to prostitutes was razor slashed and scarred. The trollops are employed by gangs who live partially from their earnings. Should these girls fail to make money something has to be done about it . . . as by threatening the obstructors and wrecking their premises.

In one of these dives, the Boulevard Club in Soho, young John Wheeler was kicked and beaten unconscious because a club "hostess" refused to meet him after he had paid five pounds for every drink inside.

He had walked into the clip-joint at the invitation of a "hostess" standing in the doorway, bought two soft drinks for himself and the girl but received no change from ten pounds.

Club owner Bronio Oliva was subsequently jailed for two years, bringing the total number of convictions for this type of money-grabbing to fifteen. Hundreds of other victims never complain to the police for fear of bad publicity—or underworld retribution.

In the first week that the new Act became law, employment agencies were filled by hussies seeking their first legitimate wages since leaving school.

One girl who used to earn 250 pounds a week said she was scared of going to prison and wouldn't go on the streets again. Three days later she was working for six pounds a week in a laundry—evidently washing her hands of the whole affair.

Their touters—the men who find them customers—were just as scared. After that memorable day they were standing about aimlessly in the streets. They used to get ten shillings for every customer they found. One of them, "Big Georgie" Lawrence, started looking for a steady job. "I used to make fifteen pounds a week just working nights," he told friends. "Now I can't make enough for beer and cigarettes."

He said that without the girls in the open to provide the attraction the "mugs" were going home early. But in the third-class West End meeting places bands of girls and touts were gathering who refused to work for "subsistence" wages in factories and offices. They worked together, plotted schemes, consulted lawyers and carefully produced ideas backed with all the money they had accumulated over the years.

The girls were fast dwindling. From the eight thousand in Greater London the number had dropped to a few thousand. One West End area alone was cut from eight hundred to three hundred. Some went abroad, others gave up.

So if loopholes could be found in existing legislation there were plenty of unsatisfied customers around.

Typical attitude of those determined to find loopholes was that of Lillian, an attractive young blonde who under normal circumstances would have had plenty to offer. She said: "Give it up? You must be mad. Once I worked for five pounds a week in a cafe. Now I make a hundred or more."

Three months ago the first warnings started to be heard in Parliamentary discussions.

Mr. Allan Fitch, member for Wigan, claimed in the Commons that the call-girl racket was growing since the Act came along. He asked if Home Secretary R. A. Butler knew of the "Ladies Directory", a glossy seven-shilling booklet listing names and addresses of call-girls advertising themselves as "models."

The booklet boldly advertises vital statistics and the type of entertainment provided by the girls. "Entertainment" encompasses everything from "personal treatment" to masochism and sadism.

Phone one of the listed numbers, ask the price of "personal treatment" and a husky-voiced female replies: "Model fees are five pounds per night. Can I book an appointment?"

The date-maker is seldom the girl who advertises but usually an old retired prostitute employed by her.

She also employs a bodyguard to cope with difficult customers. For should she come to the attention of the unscrupulous landlord who is "looking the other way" while they use his premises, he will be forced to move them out, thus losing a 30 pounds per week rent.

With the high rents and expensive advertising in the "Directory," the girls must take forty customers a week before they show a profit.

Not so with the publisher of the booklet, who decided immediately after the Act that he would cash in and "do well" out of it. Advertising rates ran as high as 40 pounds a page and he did well—until recently when he was charged with three offenses and is now out on bail. He is accused of publishing an obscene book, and —as he had admitted taking the prostitutes' money for the ads—with living "wholly or in part" on the earnings of prostitution.

SECOND warning came from, of all people, an elderly English titled lady. She had been on a tour of London's vice spots in conjunction with her well-known youth club work and reported that "vice-virgins" were being recruited from every possible source.

In sixteen well-chosen words she jolted the House of Lords and shocked Britain: "These girls charge a fiver for a long spell and one pound for a quick time."

She was the Baroness Ravensdale, a life peeress, a peeress in her own right, daughter of Lord Curzon and a friend of the Prime Minister. After visiting dozens of near-beer clip-joints she declared: "It is just like the prohibition days in America. The scum in these clubs lure in weak and innocent girls. The sinister web is woven by pimps and ponces all over London. In this racket no one ever sees anything or hears anything because a quick slash with an underworld knife is more effective than the protection of the law."

She noted that the clubs were "flowering, pushing up everywhere like mushrooms" and that for five shillings any residence can become a "club" by present registration laws. Another warning was issued by Labour life peer Lord Stonham who spoke in the House of Lords and substantiated Lady Ravensdale's charges. In Stepney (London), where the number of clubs had grown from eighteen to ninety in six years, he said, there were six combined clubs and cafes within twenty-five yards. "Their hours of drinking just cannot be controlled," said Lord Stonham. "The police, few in number and with virtually no enforceable legal powers, are quite helpless. At any time of the day or night one can see crowds of young men lounging at the doors. Their main work is living off women, drug trafficking and the rest."

The kind of clubs he was referring to were small grimy shops with the ground floor serving near-beer drinks, the basement a gambling joint—and a brothel upstairs. To see what happens in these places this reporter visited half a dozen clubs. There are clubs for colored people and clubs for white people. There are dens of perverts. There are cellars where a man twisting a piece of hemp rope in his twitching fingers is the secret sign that drugs are available.

There are near-beer drinking clubs and striptease clubs where "hostesses" intercept the sexually aroused men as they leave. In this particular club—it was a clip-joint that didn't give change to any amount put on the table—I experienced the helpless indignation that confronts the mugs who enter. It was down a side street off Oxford Street in Soho and stood next to an Italian espresso coffee bar. I walked past at first and the man on the door called out to me: "Lots of nice girls inside, sir. Come in and look around. It won't cost you anything." The man was a typical tout. Wearing his "uniform" of dark maroon, he could have passed for a cinema usher. But his right middle finger sported a bulky signet ring that could break a jaw.

I ENTERED and was met by two girls who immediately closed in behind me in case I changed my mind. Vera, she said her, name was, invited me to sit down and asked my name. We sat in a corner and she pressed her legs against mine.

"What can I do for you, dear?"

I hesitated and looked around the chianti-lit surroundings and at the nude paintings on the wall. A girl in a wide-necked loose sweater was leaning over a well-dressed businessman who obviously was to provide her next week's rent.

"I'm just looking around as the man said," I answered, and she called over to a waitress-type girl in short shorts who then presented me with a register to sign my name.

I signed.

"That'll cost you ten shillings, dear."

This, it seems, covered the wear and tear I inflicted on the floor as I walked in to get clipped.

The register was a pathetic attempt to establish the place as a club. And the ten shillings was my membership fee. "This is a business not just a club," the painted face of Vera said. "Now what can I do for you? Have a drink."

Being dubious, I ordered a blackberry and rum that had no rum. She had said it would be only five shillings and if I kept buying drinks the amount would be deducted from my final account.

"You see, dear, you buy drinks and then meet me outside and we go to my flat for a little while."

My drink arrived.

The pound note I put on the table was snatched by the waitress and that was the last I saw of it. The drink was ginger ale.

When I asked for change she replied like a child repeating poetry: "Five shillings for the drink, my drink is ten shillings, and five shillings for service charge. "That's right isn't it?"

I took my time over the glass of liquid and she was getting irritated.

"Do you like it here or not?"

I told her I hadn't finished my drink and that I was still thinking it over. She thought I was going to stay.

"You like it here?" I asked in return.

"Oh yes, it's a lot warmer in here during the winter. We used to get very cold outside on the streets. But since the Act came along things are just the way we like them."

On refusing another drink order I was gently but firmly pushed out of the place and told to come back when I had made up my mind.

But in the meantime I had learned that a Greek who owns this particular club also owned ten more like it and that he was always looking for new girls. It was at this point that I was removed.

The girls, although prostitutes on occasions, find it easier just to get the money by promises.

Sometimes they swing a key on their finger—they don't fit any particular lock but are used as evidence that a flat is available. The girls say they will meet you outside or at a nearby cafe, but they never keep their promise. Once you are out of the club about five pounds poorer the girls forget about the arrangement. Seldom will a customer go back inside and start a rumpus.

Operating hand-in-hand with these clubs is the open window routine: a prostitute taps on the ledge to attract passing men and tell them about the advantages of coming inside.

On one corner, just outside a red-lit doorway, one was actually standing on the street risking the consequences. In the second floor window was a prostitute with a dual role. Not only did she call to customers on the street below but she kept a crow's nest look-out for the law. She then gave the signal to the man across the street who relayed it to the streetwalker.

When business is below average methods are adopted to bring the product to the customer.

In Curzon Street in the elite Mayfair district a "language school" offers the necessary frontage. In red-lit neon bars the sign reads: "Private Tuition given in French" with an arrow pointing to the doorway. A girl came to the door and quoted the price of the "course." It was five pounds.

I looked through the window and into the room below the sign. There, a girl with only one motive in mind smiled up at me.

On hesitating she told me to come back when I had made up my mind.

Mayfair is the district in London. And only the elite and most attractive girls frequent this Shepherd's Market area. Prices are two to three pounds above the Soho rate but services only amount, in Lady Ravensdale's phrase, to a "quick time."

TWO years ago a method of swindling called the "Creep" was prevalent. Here, not satisfied with the five pounds needed to procure the girl, her male accomplice would rifle men's pockets. It ended when several victims complained to the police, which resulted in convictions for the girls.

Only days after the Act, came the literal example of girls going "underground." They started soliciting on London's underground trains.

Clauses in the new law say police can arrest a girl for loitering. But while travelling on the "Tube" they are not loitering.

One long-faced Transport official told me: "We can't tell which of our passengers are prostitutes. We do have plainclothes men travelling on the trains and we are keeping a watch on this."

The loophole became evident when some of the ex-streetwalkers consulted lawyers. Now they operate on trains travelling into the West End and usually pick up a customer by the time they reach the station nearest their flat. Their target is the homebound businessman, as well as theatregoers and men travelling into the West End for an evening's entertainment.

A man who brought the practice to police attention said: "On one journey into the West End I was accosted three times.

"The girls were strap hanging and giving friendly glances to the men around them. They talked in whispers to men who showed any interest."

Another angle girls use is the "taking-my-dog-for-a-walk" gambit.

The curb-crawling technique is another—used by the higher-class prostitutes.

One car girl told me: "When you see a likely looking john you stop and inquire, and are off again before a copper gets anywhere near you." The Mayfair set hauls in as much as four hundred pounds a week but is taxed more heavily on apartments and upkeep. This girl, operating in a poorer district, was driving a smaller car. "We don't try to cut into each other's beat," she explained.

WITH any large scale business advertising is one sure way of getting to the customer an ensuring higher sales. But newspapers soon caught on to the two-line "models for hire" advertisements in their personal columns and put an end to it.

In the more open districts girls shamelessly use a photograph in scanties with a phone number, address, statistics, type of treatment all under the word "Model."

Each word has a double meaning used only when police make their dutiful but harmless inquiries. On some cards the treatment borders on the revolting. Scattered amongst them are calling cards of lesbians, homosexuals, masochists, sadists and other perverts.

A small wiry Indian man approached me near Wardour Street.

"You like a girl, sir?" he asked. At the same time he offered a business card advertising London's "gayest nite spot." It was called the Spotlight Club and in fine print beneath it boasted "hostesses . . . entertainment."

In railway stations a more complicated method is employed. A well-informed tout systematically dials numbers in telephone kiosks hoping that a just-arrived and lonely traveler who answers will want something more than just bed and breakfast.

When I lifted the receiver a voice answered in an almost cultured English accent. "Would you like to speak to Tina?" he asked.

I then spoke to Tina and she invited me around to her flat on Bayswater Road. She gave me a telephone number to call if I got lost and the price of a taxi would be deducted from my final bill she said.

That's all she has to say. The average man in London soon catches on and is either easy prey or not interested.

This, then, is London, the city known abroad and at home as much for its call-girls as for St. Paul's Cathedral.

It seems that although the Street Offences Act has been successful in its primary aim of cleaning the streets, it has backfired completely on the government.

Crime rates are rising and underground prostitutional rackets, thriving.

Prime Minister Harold Macmillan didn't have twelve thousand prostitutes in mind when he coined his much-quoted phrase "you never had it so good."

But the brains and mobsters behind the multi-million pound vice business just sit back in their loopholes and laugh their agreement. It's a jolly profitable deal.

WOMAN HATER

was made to serve God in Man. In both of these concepts the urge to keep the female sex in a subordinate position—and by force if necessary—is obvious.

Woman haters whose hostility is repressed or concealed are responsible for an immense amount of misery that they inflict not only on women but also on themselves. A common type is the man who pursues a woman until he is convinced she is deeply in love with him, then abandons her for another chase. Casanova and Don Juan were of this type; both wrecked the lives of many women.

The observation is frequently made by some divorce officials and attorneys that three-fourths of all divorces and separations have their genesis in sexual hostility and incompatibility toward the husband by his wife.

Our divorce rate now stands at one in four separations—legal and otherwise. Annulments, "cat-and-dog" marriages, and marriages in which the sexual relationship is vile to one or both parties, or has been discontinued entirely, probably bring the total of unhappy marriages to at least two out of four. Cynical remarks concerning the "Ball and Chain" and the "Battle of the Sexes" are commonplace. Facts like these should lead every man, whether married or not, to ask himself the all-important question:

"Am I a woman hater, and if so—why!"

Later in this article, clues to the answer will be given. First, however, let us briefly survey the career and work of a man who might be considered the champion woman hater of all time. We can learn a great deal simply from doing this, for this man was never physically violent toward women and in fact he professed a kindly feeling for them. But he was a woman hater all the same, and a particularly vicious one because he was so plausible. He was, of course, as mentally twisted as Adolf Hitler, who proclaimed that woman's greatest privilege was to bear children in order that the population of the Third Reich (and hence its military potential) might be increased, but who was also so contemptuous of the emotions of his own mistress that he failed to marry her until he was about to kill both her and himself. In fact, he was "Due to the conditions of the royal treasury, I've decided to let my wife have the honor of taking my place this year."

—like Hitler—the "Superman" type who considers the female an inferior sex. He just didn't go for the ladies.

His name was Arthur Schopenhauer. He was born in 1788 of well-to-do parentage, his father being a successful businessman and his mother a talented novelist. The parents, however, did not get along well together, perhaps because of a conflict of wills, or because of a disparity in ages, the father being much older than the mother. They quarreled frequently and bitterly. While Arthur was still a youth his father killed himself. Soon after this the boy left home, refusing for the remainder of his days to have anything to do with his mother.

THUS the torture was plain. He was afraid of being hurt by women—which in essence is the secret of all misogynists—yet he was physically attracted by them. "He was highly sexed and much enamored of feminine companionship," wrote one biographer. But he dropped women as soon as he felt that he was in danger of liking them too much—a typical misogynist escape. Like Casanova and Don Juan, he was a heartbreaker. The only creatures he was able to trust with any real degree of affection were his poodles—of which he kept a houseful—while the only reason he was affectionate toward the poodles was because he knew that they could never dominate him.

Schopenhauer was a writer and philosopher concerned with many subjects, on which he was almost invariably pessimistic—another trait of the woman hater. He described women as the sexus sequior or second sex. And he lambasted them unmercifully in what has become his best-known essay, titled simply "Of Women." Its pages drip with a hypnotized fascination, much like that of a bird for a snake, which reveals that had he been the product of happier parentage he might have been one of the world's greatest extollers of women. This morbid fascination, too, is typical of misogynists, even of those who wouldn't make love to a woman for a king's ransom. These boys are a curious breed of men.

Schopenhauer insisted that the female's principal goal in life was to ensnare the male. Of young girls, he wrote bitterly that Nature endowed them with a "wealth of beauty . . . so that during those years they may capture the fancy of some man to such a degree that he is hurried away into undertaking the honorable care of them, in some form or other, as long as they live—a step for which there would not seem to be sufficient warranty if reason alone directed his thoughts."

At this point, a non-misogynist might comment just as acidly that the sensible man is never lured into marriage by female sex appeal alone; it is only one of the woman's attractions which he appreciates and which, in their sum total, make up his mind as to whether he wants to marry her or not.

Schopenhauer also felt that young girls have little interest in either "domestic affairs or work of any kind" —an assertion that just doesn't make sense to millions of normal males and females alike. Twanging the same old seduction string of his lyre, he continued by bellyaching: "The only business that really claims their earnest attention is love, making conquests, and everything connected with this—dress, dancing, and so on."

Concerning the intellect of woman, Schopenhauer had only scorn. While admitting that they were fitted to act "As nurses and teachers of our early childhood," he added that this was due to the fact that they were also "themselves childish, frivolous and short-sighted. In a word," he continued, "they are big children all their life long—a kind of intermediate stage between the child and the full-grown man."

Although infidelity has always been a more pronounced trait in males than in females, Schopenhauer denied this, accusing women of being inclined to unfaithfulness by nature and possessing consciences that "do not trouble them so much as we fancy."

If he did not think much of the fidelity of women toward their men, Schopenhauer thought less of their loyalty toward their own sex. The natural feeling between them he described as "actual enmity." The reason for this is that trade-jealousy which, in the case of men, does not go beyond the confines of their particular pursuit; but, with women, embraces the whole sex, since they have only one kind of business.

"Even when they meet in the street, women look at one another like Guelphs and Ghibellines . . . an exchange of compliments between two women is a much more ridiculous proceeding than between two men . . . (they are interested in only one consideration) . . . namely, with which man have they found favor . . .

"Hence deception is innate in woman, and the gift is almost as highly developed in the stupid as in the clever . . . a woman who is perfectly truthful and not given to deception is perhaps an impossibility."

Finally the great Superman accused women of seeing and understanding only that "which is directly under her nose" and of believing that men were created solely to support them. "In their hearts," he declared, "women think that it is man's business to earn money and theirs to spend it—if possible during their husband's life, but at any rate after his death."

This is certainly a sweeping indictment of the distaff sex! Curiously enough, it has been held by a great many so-called male philosophers, and in fact there is considerable truth in it. But the point is, it is possible for any prejudiced person to belittle practically anything under the sun merely by stressing characteristics of which the person disapproves and ignoring characteristics of which the person approves, or should approve. We see this sort of thing all the time when any important issue is being debated, when proponents of one side juggle the facts to support their argument and proponents of the other side do the same thing in reverse. We see it ad nauseum all the time in the advertising pitch for countless items of merchandise which are being sold on a competitive basis.

WHAT Schopenhauer was doing was making an advertising pitch in favor of the male sex by belittling the female sex. There was nothing new in that; the ancient Chinese held that the "male principle" originated in light and was good while the "female principle" originated in darkness and was evil. In the mythology of many lands the Sun is given masculine attributes, the moon feminine ones. It was not until several centuries after Christ that the Roman Catholic Church decided, in council, that the human female possesses a soul.

If Schopenhauer and his cohorts down the ages had bothered to investigate the reasons why women differ psychologically from men in certain ways—and they do—they would have been performing an honest service to both sexes. But they had no intention of doing that. Instead, they wanted to perpetuate the doctrine of male supremacy, just as Hitler and others have tried to create and perpetuate doctrines of blood superiority. And they succeeded so well that they had not only the men but the gals fooled for many thousands of years.

Where all these fellows were wrong was in that they failed to recognize that neither man nor woman is the superior sex, but that the two sexes are equal and complementary. Nor did they admit that the deviousness, preoccupation with courtship and

". . . and I want a good, clean fight."

"getting and holding a man," extreme concern over security, and sex rivalry they noted in females were direct results of the subordinate position in which men hold women and the enforced dependence of women on men for existence itself. These traits are not peculiar to the female sex; they appear in the male sex when men are in the power of other men—as serfs with lords, courtiers with kings, and subordinates with bosses. If any female can be trickier than a man who's out to curry favor with his male superior, it's news to this writer.

Schopenhauer stressed the single-mindedness and tenacity of women as somehow detrimental characteristics. And it is quite true that men, by comparison, are more inclined than women to grow dissatisfied with their lot, discard wives, switch from job to job, and just drop everything and go adventuring. Females have stick-to-itiveness for a very good reason: they are saddled with the bearing and rearing of children and they need a long-term and secure environment to do that. For the same reason, the female-human and other species is a more formidable antagonist than the male when security is threatened. As Dr. Mark Sweitzer has noted, "In the animal world, the female attacks first and most furiously."

It's obvious, therefore, that the man who secretly wants to be an irresponsible roamer and ne'er-do-well should steer shy of serious commitments with women, because if he marries and backslides his wife is likely to make his life a hell. Actually he's a woman hater, for willingness to work and not just play for awhile at marriage is basic in the real he-man. And the he-man is also willing to let his wife dominate the home, just as he dominates activities outside the home. It's her sphere of greatest competency, and he admits it.

Schopenhouer whines of the talent of wives at getting control of the family finances. Here again he was twisting an asset into a liability. Females are far better hoarders and penny-pinchers than males and can make a dollar go further, as honest husbands will admit. The reason U. S. females control the spending of about 85 per cent of the nation's paycheck is not because of trickery on their part; it's because their men want them to handle the cash.

Schopenhauer also yelped that females were not industrious. But numerous industrial studies show that females are actually more productive than males, and less inclined to become irritable on routine jobs, in which the same operation is repeated over and over. According to the Minnesota Clerical Tests they are consistently better than males on jobs that require quick recognition of small details and constant attention.

We could go on indefinitely about the psychological differences between the sexes, which are so consistent that intelligence tests have to be "rigged" so that items in which one sex is more proficient are offset by items in which the opposite sex excels. However, they have become well-known in recent decades, while the number of men who still prate "masculine superiority" is steadily decreasing. And the man who does is, again, probably that has made

MILLIONS IN MAIL ORDER
An open letter to anyone who wants to make MORE MONEY with LESS EFFORT!

• Dear Friend:
If you're like most people, you have always dreamed of "some day" starting and owning a nice little Home Mail Order business, so that you can quit knocking yourself out day after day, with no real money to show for it.
"What a relief," you have thought. "Just to pick up orders and money at the Post Office, with almost nothing else to do but spend your profits." No traveling. No hard selling. No night work.
And you want to know something? That's exactly the way a Mail Order Business can be, under the right circumstances. I am doing it myself. I've helped other ambitious men and women to do it. And I'll help you, if you'll let me.

• START NOW — NO EXPERIENCE REQUIRED
I'm not talking about a long winded book on "Mail Order Methods", or a "Course of Study" that will take you a year to digest and still leave you up in the air! You've answered ads like that, I am sure . . . only to be disappointed and perhaps even annoyed that they promised so much, and turned out to be of such little practical value.
No . . . I'm not trying to educate you. My purpose is to set you up in a profitable Mail Order Business . . . not next year or next month, but right now so you can start making money the same way I do. A way that has brought me security and financial independence.

• THE SECRET KEY THAT HAS MADE MILLIONS
The heading on this ad mentions what I call the "Secret Key", and says it has "Made Millions in Mail Order". And that's no exaggeration! It is responsible for some of the most fabulous successes in history! There's no room here to explain it . . . but if you show a sincere interest by mailing me the Coupon below, I'll send you a FREE sample and tell you how to use it . . . to make more money with less effort than you have ever imagined, even in your wildest dreams! That's Step No. 1 of my plan to set you up in business.

• CASH IN ON FOREIGN MADE PRODUCTS (IMPORTS)
Everybody knows that there is a fantastic profit in IMPORTS . . . that items costing 50c or $1 abroad often sell up to $5 and $10 in this Country! But what most people don't realize is that importing procedures are too complicated for the average person to undertake on his own. And that's where I come in.
I am already importing watches, and cameras, and sporting goods and hundreds of other fast-moving items from all over the world . . . Now you can do the same without experience or previous importing knowledge! My secret Key Plan is an airtight Program, all laid out for you ready to go. I make everything available to you at once! You do not advertise; you do not prepare advertising literature of any kind. You do not invest in merchandise or inventory. You do not even handle the imports that you sell so easily, by mail to the public. About all you have to do is go to the Post Office for your mail, then to the Bank with your profits. That's Step No. 2 of the Program I offer you.

• EXCLUSIVE FRANCHISE IF YOU ACT NOW AND CAN QUALIFY
Once you start making money in this exciting way, you'll want to make sure it will last . . . so my 3rd and final step is to offer you an opportunity to have an Exclusive Franchise to hold as long as you qualify. With this Franchise as protection you may make more, and more, and MORE. Start as small as you wish at home, build a big business requiring a special building & dozens of employees, if that is your ambition.
My own beginning was made with about $50 capital, and no help from anyone (such as I now offer you). Today my sales by mail have long since passed the million dollar mark. I own a big home and my own business building, drive to work in a Cadillac, pay out thousands of dollars a month to employees. And every penny of this came from mail order profits.
So you see, my "Secret Key" is not an untried idea or a pipe dream. It is a proven, practical money maker that you can use just as I do, perhaps to take in more money every day than you could reasonably expect to make in a month by personal, face-to-face selling . . . no matter how good you are, or how good your product.

• NO INVESTMENT IN MERCHANDISE
Let me repeat what I stated above . . . that you don't have to invest even one penny in merchandise. Just follow my detailed plans for use of the "Secret Key". If you ever find an easier way to make money at home, I hope you'll tell me so I can join you. In the meantime, I hope you'll start my way, for it's the easiest I've seen or heard of up to now!
Airmail the Coupon today sure. Only a limited number of Exclusive Franchises are available. I'll see that you get the FREE sample of the "Secret Key" along with complete details of my Entire Secret Key Plan immediately. No cost or obligation. Just fill out and mail the Coupon NOW! You will always be glad you did!

a misogynist or at least abysmally ignorant.

There are a great many ways in which the misogynist reveals his hatred. Following are some of the most important of them, together with the explanations:

Unwillingness to attempt to understand a woman's point of view. The underlying reason for this is that the man is subconsciously afraid that the woman may be right and he wrong. This is a symptom of false pride, and false pride where sex is concerned is of course a symptom of sex fear.

Impatience over female preoccupation with what the male may consider "little details"—such as matching colors, arranging furnishings and knick-knacks just so, neatness, wrapping presents prettily, and emptying ashtrays long before they are full. The normal male doesn't give a damn about these things, but he realizes that to the female they are very important, since they fulfill her urge to be constantly improving her nest. Again, his reaction is merely amused tolerance.

Impatience with females who just can't seem to make up their minds on minor matters is a basic female trait, contrasting sharply with their stubbornness concerning matters they consider important. Probably it stems from their "harem" background when they had practically no decisions to make.

Reluctance to initiate courtship or love-making. The man who reveals this tendency is subconsciously doubtful of his own manliness, and is establishing an alibi in advance in case a romance or marriage is a failure. He is anticipating the day when he will be able to point out "It was you, not I, who started the whole thing."

The urge to punish females harshly for minor errors of any sort. This reveals the desire to instill perfectionism in the opposite sex by vindicative action; it also reveals sex cruelty.

The attitude that if a marriage fails no great harm is done; a divorce can be obtained and both parties can try again with new partners. The man who feels this way is extremely contemptuous of the opposite sex.

Expanding on the above, it should be possible for the intelligent, objective man to determine whether or not he possesses misogynist tendencies. If they seem present in more than mild degree, consultation with some authority such as the pastor, priest, sexologist, specialist on marital problems, medical doctor or psychiatrist appears advisable. Unless he is helped, the true woman hater is doomed to a life of increasingly severe frustration and unhappiness. He is also certain to hurt at least one and most likely many women, and the probabilities are that his abnormal urges will result in grave tragedy, if not in acts that will place him in the category of a major sex criminal ■ air hose a trifle to get some air to breathe, and immediately my rig ballooned out under the slight pressure.

Two husky dressers seized me, one by each shoulder, and helped me to the stage. A bosun's pipe shrilled and a winch rattled into action. The stage went up, the boom swung out, and the next instant I was swaying erratically with the stage outboard off the bulwark and only the pitching sea beneath me. Again, muffled now by the noise of the air whistling through my helmet, I heard the bosun piping. Down into the sea splashed the stage. Immediately, my canvas suit, which had been grotesquely swelled out in the air, collapsed like a punctured balloon, its folds pressing in tightly against my frame, leaving only a little air space inside over my chest where the breastplate held it out.

Down a few feet the stage stopped. I sang out: "Topside, there! All ready! Lower away!"

I felt the lifeline and air hose tauten up as my shipboard tender took in the slack; then a far away voice sounded through the transmitters over my ears:

"Okay. Step off the stage!"

I stepped off. The stage was promptly hoisted, and I dangled on my lifelines with nothing below me now but the bottom of the sea.

The light, never very good, faded quickly as I sank. A few fathoms down and the hull of the Falcon disappeared from view, the surface faded away, and around me was nothing but water. A little above me the manila line down which I slid seemed to dissolve, and beneath my feet more line seemed to materialize constantly out of nothing. Down through seemingly bottomless depths, through an unearthly quiet broken only by the air whistling through my helmet and then out, leaving behind me a trail of air bubbles streaming from my exhaust valve, rising, expanding, breaking up in the water as they rose.

My eyes were down now, always down, peering through my face plate at the descending line that was my only guide. The line started to slope away more sharply toward the hori-

Says Parables in Bible Show Way To Get Rich

"Many rich and successful men and women," declares the author of a sensational 64-page book, "have no more brains or energy than average. They are usually driven to success. Frequently they are so helpless they can't quit even when they want to. Their money is made in spite of themselves."

The author gives a most astonishing formula for wealth and success based on long misunderstood parables in the Bible, a formula which he developed while making four fortunes—two for other people and two for himself. Even while the formula was still incomplete, he made and lost fortunes. Now the formula is complete, he declares success can be won again by the average person and made permanent.

The formula can be followed by rich or poor, in almost any job or business in any honest trade or profession. And it is so simple that the entire book can be read in three hours. Its title is "Get Rich in Spite of Yourself."

The book has proved a sensation. Thousands ordered by sales managers for their salesmen. A leading eastern publisher is offering a deluxe store edition. It has been published in England, and a translation has been published in Spain. A big newspaper syndicate wanted to run it serially in 60 newspapers. Many readers wonder why they did not discover the formula for themselves, it is so amazingly right, so plainly practical and workable.

The entire book, containing the complete formula, is offered for only one dollar. The publishers say "Read it for three hours, watch results for three weeks and if you are not delighted, return the book and get your money back." The publisher, Grafe and Grafe, 7172 Melrose Ave., Dept. 139, Los Angeles 46, California, will be pleased to send the 64-page book to any reader of this article—$1.00 cash with order, postage prepaid. Or it may be ordered C.O.D. but then the extra postal charges will be 51¢.

A bonus 32-page booklet is offered without extra charge to every one ordering at this time. The title of this popular bonus book is "The Magic Between the Lines of the Lord's Prayer." Order today and get both booklets for your dollar.

zontal: I took a firmer grip with my legs to hang on to it. And then, vaguely forming out of the water below me, was the S-4, which, like the rope down which I slid, seemed to be materializing fantastically out of nothingness.

The submarine S-4 had gone down with all hands lost on December 17, 1927, following a collision with the cutter Paulding. Although we on the Falcon knew salvage was our only job, the Navy needed to know more about what had happened in order to improve future underwater operations.

A few more fathoms down the line and I stopped, shouted into my telephone:

"On the bottom!"

I was at last on the S-4. There she lay before me, silent, motionless, her bulk strangely magnified by the water. I was standing on her very bow, in the thin triangle where sides and deck met stem, a precarious perch with no railing for support.

I CONTINUED AFT, lifelines trailing behind me in the water, helmet bent forward, looking for damage. So far nothing. The S-4, silent, immobile, bow diving fins still trained out, rested there on the bottom as erect, as unhurt, as if she were simply bottoming for practice and might any minute start up her motors and swim gently upward.

The deck widened further. I was perhaps seventy feet aft and increasing my pace, when before me the deck suddenly vanished, torn completely away! In a tangle of steel, the deck ended where the Paulding, evidently riding across the submarine, had ripped the superstructure and the deck clean off.

Peering over the edge of the broken deck, I could see below me the cylindrical hull. Cautiously, so as not to cut open my diving suit on any of the jagged plates, I clambered down to the hull below, then continued aft again, eyes glued now on that round steel shell, searching for the rupture which had flooded the inside of the submarine. But there was no opening, no gash in it anywhere, just that smooth round hull beneath my feet with the superstructure wiped clean off, except to port where in an ugly tangle lay the remnants of the super-structure.

Once more I clambered over the slewed gun, dropped down over the broken deck edge onto the cylindrical hull, and started slowly forward, staring sharply down through my face plate at the smooth round plates below me, searching from starboard to port for that hole.

A few steps forward, and then, as if a fog had suddenly rolled in, the submarine disappeared. From my waist down I stood in a cloud of mud; in no direction was any part of the S-4 visible!

I was completely lost. I looked down at the clouds of mud billowing there in the water, blotting out my legs, blanketing the submarine. What had happened? Apparently in my passage aft along the sub I must have stirred up a fine layer of mud with which the sea had coated the S-4. Now, going forward again, I was caught in the resulting fog. Somewhere to port of me was the wreckage of the conning tower, to starboard the curving side of the hull. A step in any direction but the right one would land me in trouble, but which way in that mud-shrouded water was right?

And then it came. On the surface, the Falcon took a wide yaw among the waves. My lifelines suddenly tautened, jerked my breastplate, threw me off balance. I felt myself going over sidewise, in another instant sprawled face down on the submar- over sidewise, sliding helplessly through the water over the curving hull of the S-4!

Suddenly, a projection flashed before my face plate! Out shot my right hand—grasped it! I stopped with a jolt that nearly jerked my arm from its socket. Before my eyes was what I had made that dive to find. Through the face plate of my helmet I was staring straight into a hole punched through the S-4's side into her battery room. And the projection I was clinging to was part of the Paulding steel stem, still jammed like a broken lance into the S-4's death wound!

Dangling there in the water by one arm, completely forgetful of my own plight, I swiftly examined that hole. It was surprisingly small, hardly a foot across, to have sunk a ship and killed her crew. But it had been more than enough.

A second look into the hole finished my examination. The damage was insignificant as effecting the strength of the ship to stand a lift—no danger of that trifling hole causing the ship to break in two when our lifting gear took a quick strain.

With that, I swiftly forgot all about the submarine's troubles and came back to my own. We could raise the submarine all right, but how about myself? I had broken my fall. What could I now do to lift myself up on deck? I tilted back my head, looked out through the top port of my helmet. Then cold fear suddenly gripped me. A stream of bubbles was pouring upwards through the water from my hand. The jagged steel to which I clung had cut open my water-tight glove. Now, from the highest point in my suit, I was rapidly losing all my air!

I felt the sea pressure on my chest as the air went out; breathing became more difficult. I glanced up again at my cut glove, at the air bubbling away, and realized the sharp metal was stlil cutting, widening the hole. There was nothing to do but to let go while still I had a little air left in my suit.

I went down through the water faster than before, with less air to buoy me up and that two hundred pounds of lead and copper dragging me into the depths. I got one last glimpse of the side of the S-4 shooting by my faceplate and then—the light went out!

I had hit bottom, but instead of stopping there, I shot completely through it to find myself buried in soft mud, engulfed in total darkness —and still sinking helplessly, dragged down by my weights!

Convulsively, I tried to straighten myself, to get my feet down and my head up, but with each desperate flailing of my arms and legs I could feel myself only sinking deeper through that clinging mud. All along beneath me I felt sharp points jabbing upward into my diving suit. What I had come to rest upon there in the deep mud was twisted wreckage torn from the Paulding's keel as she raked over the S-4, wreckage now sunk alongside her victim. And if I moved, those razor-edged steel plates would cut my suit wide open in a dozen places as the Paulding's bow piece had already ripped apart my glove.

Carefully, slowly, I twisted my head around to bring my mouth opposite the telephone transmitter in the roof of my helmet, fortunately clear of the water lapping round my neck. I gasped out: "Topside, there!"

Had the water already short-circuited my telephone? With infinite

Bass Fishermen will Say I'm Crazy . . . until they try my method!

But, after an honest trial, if you're at all like the other men to whom I've told my strange plan, you'll guard it with your last breath.

Don't jump at conclusions. I'm not a manufacturer of any fancy new lure. I have no reels or lines to sell. I'm a professional man and make a good living in my profession. But my all-absorbing hobby is fishing. And, quite by accident, I've discovered how to go to waters that most fishermen say are fished out and come in with a good catch of the biggest bass that you ever saw. The savage old bass that got so big, because they were "wise" to every ordinary way of fishing.

This METHOD is NOT spinning, trolling, casting, fly fishing, trot line fishing, set line fishing, hand line fishing, live bait fishing, jugging, netting, trapping, or seining. No live bait or prepared bait is used. You can carry all of the equipment you need in one hand.

The whole method can be learned in twenty minutes —twenty minutes of fascinating reading. All the extra equipment you need, you can buy locally at a cost of less than a dollar. Yet with it, you can come in after an hour or two of the greatest excitement of your life, with a stringer full. Not one or two miserable 12 or 14 inch over-sized keepers — but five or six real beauties with real poundage behind them. The kind that don't need a word of explanation of the professional skill of the man who caught them. Absolutely legal, too—in every state.

This amazing method was developed by a little group of professional fishermen. Though they were public guides, they rarely divulged their method to their patrons. They used it only when fishing for their own tables. It is possible that no man on your waters has ever seen it, ever heard of it, or ever used it. And when you have given it the first trial, you will be as closed-mouthed as a man who has suddenly discovered a gold mine. Because with this method you can fish within a hundred feet of the best fishermen in the county and pull in ferocious big ones while they come home empty handed. No special skill is required. The method is just as deadly in the hands of a novice as in the hands of an old timer. My method will be disclosed only to those men in each area who will give me their word of honor not to give the method to anyone else.

Send me your name. Let me tell you how you can try out this deadly method of bringing in big bass from your local waters. Let me tell you why I let you try out my unusual method for the whole fishing season without risking a penny of your money. Send your name for details of my money-back trial offer. There is no charge for this information, now or at any other time. Just your name is all I need. But I guarantee that the information I send you will make you a complete skeptic—until you decide to try my method! And then, your own catches will fill you with disbelief. Send your name, today. This will be fun.

Eric A. Fare, Highland Park 66, Ill.

Dear Mr. Fare: Send me complete information without any charge and without the slightest obligation. Tell me how I can learn your method of catching big bass from waters many say are "fished out," even when the old timers are reporting "No Luck."

(Sorry, no C.O.D.'s)

relief I heard an answer from the Falcon in the world above me.

"Topside. What is it?"

"Heave on my lifeline."

"Aye, aye. Right away!"

After what seemed to me an endless wait, with not the slightest pull on my lines that I could feel, I sang out again: "Topside, there? Are you heaving yet?"

The answer fell like a sledge hammer blow on my strained nerves.

"Yes! Four men are heaving hard on your lines, but they can't get an inch of slack. What's the matter down there?"

Four men heaving on my lines and I couldn't feel even a slight pull! My lines were apparently fouled on something above me, probably tangled in the Paulding's broken stem which had already pierced my glove. The strain that four strong men could put on my air hose fouled on the sharp edges of that jagged stem projecting from the S-4's side could easily cut my rubber air hose in two, leave me there in the mud to asphyxiate!

In a strangled voice, I screamed: "Topside there! Avast heaving! Slack off! Slack off for God's sake!"

Then I became vaguely aware in the utter silence and blackness of that grave beneath the ocean floor, of a persistent murmur in my helmet, of a murmur to which long familiarity had made me oblivious. A small current of air was still flowing through my helmet, escaping with a gurgle through the exhaust valve somewhere near my chin. I still had air coming through my hose from above.

Slowly, cautiously, not to let any movement of my body saw sharp steel through my suit, I dragged my left arm through the mud to my chest, fumbled with frozen fingers and found the handle of the air control valve. My fingers closed on that valve handle, twisted it wide open.

A suddenly increased stream of compressed air roared into my helmet, started to inflate my suit. Under the increasing buoyancy my helmet lifted a trifle; then, as if a giant hand had seized me by the shoulders, my body started to float upward through the mud, to come erect as my suit swelled more and more. Another moment and I was free of that bed of torn steel plates. I could feel myself being dragged upward through the mud by my greatly over-inflated diving suit!

A little further and my helmet burst through the ooze of the ocean floor into the water.

Light! Blessed light streaming through my face plate again. After the terrifying darkness of the mud, that dim half-twilight of the depths, seemed as if the sun had suddenly risen inside my helmet.

But my dangers were not yet over. Under the pull of my partially ballooned rig, I was still rising from the mud, excessively buoyant. If, when I tore free of that clinging ooze, I was still as light, I would shoot upward through the water with ever-increasing speed as the sea pressure deceased and the air in my suit ballooned further, perhaps to crash into the Falcon above and kill myself.

AS soon as my helmet popped out into the water my fingers were clawing again through the mud for my control valve, shutting off the air before it was too late. When the excess air had blown off through the exhaust and my ballooned-out rig had shrunk back to more normal proportions so that I ceased rising, I found myself still buried to my waist in mud, with only the upper half of my body in the water.

I looked up. To my surprise, the lifeline and air hose were floating vertically above me with no tangles in sight. Were they still fouled, or had my rise from below permitted them to slack off and perhaps to come clear of trouble? I could quickly find out. Once more I called the Falcon.

"Topside there! Take an easy pull on my lines!"

A brief moment, then I felt a gentle tug on my breastplate. My lines were free! I bled more air from my rig to make sure I was heavy enough not to float.

"Topside there! Pull me up ten feet!"

My lines promptly tautened and up I went, legs tearing free of the mud. When the heaving ceased I was clear at last, a fathom off the bottom, dangling in the water from my lifelines!

My undersea inspection was done —by a freak of fortune, successfully. A few more words over the telephone and I was started upward for the surface, a rise broken by lengthening stops every few fathoms as the water pressure deceased, to allow the air to work itself out of my blood gradually, to decompress me.

Step by step, I was lifted until I could see once more through my face plate that foam-flecked undulating sheet, the surface, with the familiar red underwater hull of the Falcon nestling in it. One more last stop, and then at last the welcome message: "Coming aboard!"

I heaved up and dropped on deck. Dripping mud and water, I was seized by the tenders, dragged to a bench, my belt, shoes, and helmet hastily stripped off, and then without a pause, still in my dripping suit, I was rushed across the deck, jammed through the outed door of the recompression chamber into the first lock. A tender twisted open an air valve and in roared a stream of compressed air, once more to get me under pressure, to make sure that no bubbles of air formed in my veins.

WHAT happened to the S-4? I made my report to Captain King, of the Falcon carefully outlining the condition of the submarine. Salvage operations began.

By now, a few days before Christmas, our salvage gear had all arrived, and so also had practically all the divers used in a previous salvage operation on the ill-fated S-51.

Using the same general equipment and methods by which, two years before, the S-51 had been raised, we sealed up the inside of the submarine, expelled the flood waters from the undamaged compartments, tunneled under to pass lifting chains, sank and attached pontoons, and finally on March 17, 1928, three months to a day from the time the Paulding sank her, the S-4 rose again from the depths.

A study of the wreck determined that the submarine and her crew had been held tightly in the grip of misfortune. First, she had surfaced by pure chance directly in the Paulding's path. Second, a vent valve in the control room had been clogged up by a floating door curtain, preventing the men from stopping the flood, and forcing them to leave the one place where they had a chance to survive.

Ceremonies for these men who had lost their lives at sea were held ashore with Navy personnel in attendance. I could only thank God that my own name was not on that grim roll call of dead heroes. ■

Now—the famous, proven MADE SIMPLE method offers you an education worth hundreds of dollars for pennies a day! Complete practical instruction in science, business and cultural subjects that you use every day for the children in school, mother at home, dad in his work and everybody in all their social contacts.

You can master these subjects in as little as 15 minutes a day, in weeks instead of years, with these books that are recommended by parents and noted educators for all age groups.

Learn Whenever You Want—Like Having Private Instructors In Your Own Home

This MADE SIMPLE SELF-TEACHING set is the only encyclopedia that makes important subjects part of your general knowledge instead of having to look in books to solve every problem. It covers practical, useful subjects in everyday language. It's like having private instructors in your own home. Learn at your own pace. No outside work, nothing else to buy. The books start from the beginning, assume no previous knowledge and lead you quickly and carefully through the entire subject. Prepared by experts for adults working without supervision, they also perfectly supplement classroom texts, which contain confusing technical language.

Beautiful Library Volumes Perfect for Learning, Brush-Up, Permanent Reference

Whether you want to learn for the first time, review subjects you forgot or use for ever-ready reference, you could find no better set or price. These handsome 7¼ x 10½ inch, 24-carat gold imprinted, matched library volumes are not digests or outlines. Every point is made absolutely clear by illustrations and simple step-by-step explanations, using everyday situations. No half-answers to confuse you, no cross-references to make you use several books to get information. All the books teach you naturally, without memorizing long lists of rules.

Complete Explanations, Simple Illustrations Make Every Point Clear—No Previous Knowledge of the Subject Required

Here's how complicated subjects are MADE SIMPLE. In PHYSICS MADE SIMPLE, you are shown this simple home experiment, which costs nothing. Hold one edge of a letter paper against your chin, just below lower lip, with the paper hanging over and down. Blow above the paper and it will rise as if pulled up in the air stream. This simple principle makes airplanes fly and teaches us to make moving objects move quickly and easily. Other books give you Bernoulli's Law, molecular action and other confusing terms. By the time you got to the experiment, if there was one, you wouldn't understand it. Here you read a simple explanation, do the experiment and then learn the technical terms, so you learn naturally, by doing, without memorizing anything. This has worked for many people who thought they were more hopeless than you may think you are.

You would pay many times the price for much less beautiful and useful encyclopedias. But, these books, with sample military and civil service tests, hundreds of illustrations, hundreds of safe, easy home experiments, thousands of pages of clear, concise, valuable instruction and self-tests with answers in the back, will be USED, ENJOYED and ADMIRED by all your family and friends.
